U.S. drivers cost us $100M

Times News Services

The number of U.S. motorists filling their tanks at Canadian border points has increased by 53 per cent in the last year and Canadians are subsidizing them at the rate of about $100 million annually, a Progressive Conservative MP charged Monday.

Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre) told the Commons that the latest Statistics Canada figures show more than one million U.S. motorists crossed the border for less than one day in April, 1980.

Noting a similar trend among foreign airlines, truckers and ship owners, Andre sought unsuccessfully to have the Liberal government release estimates of the amount of transportation fuel sold in Canada that ends up across the border.

Canadian gasoline prices are as much as 50 cents-a-gallon cheaper than in many U.S. regions. So far, the government has given little indication it is worried about any drain on domestic supply.

The Alberta MP also said the cost should be made public as well as "government plans, if any, to deal with this situation."

A federal subsidy on expensive imported oil ensures the domestic wellhead price of $14.75 a barrel is paid across the country, compared to the world price of about $35 a barrel.

Cost of an import compensation program that makes up the difference between world and domestic prices is estimated at close to $4 billion for the current fiscal year.

But pressure from economists and energy experts is mounting for the government to increase the price of oil and natural gas.

James Krammer, a McMaster University energy expert, told the Consumers' Association of Canada annual meeting Monday that a shocking increase in prices now may be the best way to convince Canadians to realistically face the energy-hungry future.

He said consumers must face inevitably higher prices and it is better to get used to them now than later.

"The longer we put it off, the greater the shock will be," he told delegates in Hamilton, Ont.

And John Foster, the incoming chairman of the Canadian Nuclear Association said Monday that Canadians should pay the world price for oil to encourage development of other energy sources such as nuclear power.

Foster said the lower price of Canadian oil might defer the development of costly tar sands projects and nuclear reactors to generate electric power until there was no choice.

The result could be disastrous, with neither time nor money to develop alternative energy sources when the crunch comes, he said, but higher prices for oil would force action sooner.

Oil pricing policy is a political hot potato and proposals to change the current pricing formula are being negotiated by the federal and Alberta governments.

The present formula expires at the end of this month and Alberta has rejected a federal interim proposal that prices be increased $2 a barrel until Oct. 1 when a permanent formula could be devised.

Federal Energy Minister Marc Lalonde has warned Alberta not to unilaterally increase the price of its oil.

He told a television interviewer last weekend that if Alberta attempts to raise the price on its oil Ottawa will consider invoking the Petroleum Administration Act to fix the price itself.

Meanwhile, in the U.S., almost a year after Congress and President Carter decided a crash program to develop synthetic fuels was needed, House of Representative and Senate negotiators have approved a multi-billion-dollar bill to start the industry.

In finishing months of work on the measure Monday, the conferees also directed Carter to resume filling the strategic petroleum reserve, the U.S. stockpile of oil, at the rate of at least 100,000 barrels a day.

OPERATION OPEN HOUSE was staged today at Royal Jubilee Hospital for students from Wagon Wheel pre-school in Langford. Youngsters were given surgical masks, hats and identification bracelets to wear as RJH volunteer worker Caroline Mothersell, right, took them on tour to show that a visit to hospital isn't anything to be worried about. Teacher Joan Hoffman says visit hopefully will allay fears youngsters often feel when they're taken to emergency or admitted to hospital for treatment.

$200,000 fire guts cabaret

An early morning fire that gutted the Surfside Club caused an estimated $200,000 damage, Victoria fire officials said today.

Cause of the blaze at the rock cabaret in the basement of Hartwig Court, 1208 Wharf, has not been determined but faulty electrical wiring is suspected.

The fire was spotted by a city policeman on patrol at 3:50 a.m., about an hour after club staff had left for the night.

Firemen from all three city fire halls attended and managed to confine the blaze to the club. No one was injured.

The club was destroyed and there was considerable smoke damage to offices in the upper floors of the three-storey brick building.

Deputy chief Fred Severson put structural loss at $100,000 and another $100,000 loss to contents including $50,000 to $60,000 worth of sound equipment belonging to guest band, Blitz of Toronto.

Severson said the fire appeared to have started in wiring in the ceiling above the bar.

By the time the fire was detected, the club was engulfed in flames.

Earlier in the evening the four-member band group had complained of troubles with their equipment, possibly due to a short in the wiring, but Severson said firemen have ruled that out as a possible cause of the fire.

The band was mid-way through a cross-Canada tour but now will have to cut short their trip.

Club manager David Krenbrink was not available for comment.

The building is owned by Cedric Steele. The loss is fully insured.

Picketing slows food to Island

Striking Woodward's food floor clerks spread their picketing to B.C. mainland ferry terminals Monday, effectively halting truck movement of goods to the Victoria and Port Alberni stores, a union official said.

Unionized ferry workers, refused to issue tickets to the truckers, said Bryan Denton, secretary-treasurer of the Retail Clerks Union, which represents striking clerks at the Victoria food floor.

The pickets did not affect sailings or halt other traffic, he added.

He said the picketing will continue as long as necessary to put pressure on Woodward's in the two-week-old strike.

"As far as I know we stopped everything yesterday," Denton said today.

The picketing is inconvenient, but so far the company has been able to maintain a full assortment of stock in its food floors, said Bill Brown, company personnel vice-president.

Unionized employees at the food distribution centre have refused to cross picket lines, which Brown has warned could lead to closure of Woodward's 13 food floors.

City okays suds sales

There will be beer in the stands at Royal Athletic Park this summer after city council's parks and recreation committee agreed today to a request from two of the park's major tenants.

Victoria Budgets of the Northwest Fastball League club and Victoria Blues of the professional Northwest Baseball League had asked the city to expand the sale of beer at the park to allow people to drink in the seats.

Last August the city permitted an enclosed area for the sale of beer behind the stands, out of sight of the baseball and fastball diamond.

"Where it is now is barbaric. It is like a cattle corral," said Robert Peden, president of the Blues.

The committee decided to allow beer in the seats for a 30-day trial period. Recreation director Jack Morgan will monitor the situation closely and will have the power to suspend sales or limit the area for drinking if problems occur.

Earlier this spring, consumption of beer in the seats at Nat Bailey Stadium on Little Mountain was granted for home baseball games of Vancouver Canadians of the Pacific Coast League.

Court strikes down Fisheries Act rule

OTTAWA (CP) — A section of the federal Fisheries Act which places a blanket prohibition on logging operations in waters frequented by fish, is beyond the powers of Parliament, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled today.

The judgment said Parliament had intruded onto provincial jurisdiction contrary to the British North America Act, the country's constitution.

In a unanimous judgment, the court erased a conviction against Dan Fowler who was charged with unlawfully putting debris into waters at or near Forbes Bay, B.C., while engaged in logging.

A verdict of guilty was imposed by a County Court judge. The British Columbia Court of Appeal agreed he was guilty.

Government lawyers argued in the Supreme Court that the section of the Fisheries Act was necessary as preventive legislation intended for the federal duty to preserve and protect fish. They said that its validity did not depend on showing that the operations to which it related caused actual harm to a fishery.

Mr. Justice Ronald Martland, writing reasons for the Supreme Court, said the section covered a wide field of logging activities and the amount of substance deposited in the water didn't matter.

He said the section made no attempt to link the banned activity to actual harm to fisheries.

"It is a blanket prohibition of certain types of activity, subject to provincial jurisdiction, " said Mr. Justice Martland.

Furthermore, he concluded, there was no evidence before the court to indicate that activities banned by the act did cause harm to fisheries.

Recession brink nearer

OTTAWA (CP) — The value of goods and services in the economy for the first three months of this year declined for the second consecutive quarter, suggesting the country is on the verge of a recession.

Figures released today by Statistics Canada show the gross national product fell 0.5 per cent for the first quarter, representing a decline of two per cent at annual rates.

Private sector forecasters had expected the decrease in the GNP as another indication of an approaching recession, defined as two consecutive quarters of economic decline.

The last time economic production dropped as much was in the second quarter of 1974 when the recession lasted until early 1975.

Excluding the effects of price increases and adjusting for seasonal variations, Statistics Canada said the sources of weakness in the economy continued to be residential construction, down 6.1 per cent, merchandise exports, down 2.2 per cent and personal spending on goods, up only 0.4 per cent.

Flights nipped

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Continental Airlines, citing overcapacity spurred by the "realities of the current recession," announced Monday it would cut flights by 20 per cent this fall and lay off 1,200 workers.

The carrier said the 10-per-cent reduction of its 12,000-member workforce is the largest in its 46-year history.

Phillips drags feds over coal

Industry Minister Don Phillips had some bitter words Monday for Senator Ray Perrault following the collapse of a federal-provincial deal on northeast coal.

"He fights very hard to protect the Liberals and the federal government in B.C. but I don't think he does that good a job representing B.C.'s position in Ottawa," said Phillips.

Perrault, government leader in the Senate, denied Monday that Ottawa's intransigence forced B.C.'s decision to go it alone in developing the Sukunka coal deposits.

He told a Vancouver press conference that, while B.C. will be building the 115-kilometre rail spur into the coal fields, the federal government still plans to spend $400 million on other aspects of the project.

Perrault did not spell out how the $400 million will be spent and Phillips promptly disputed the amount.

"There was no $400 million talked about in our negotiations with Ottawa," he said. "I don't know where he gets his figures from."

The minister said Ottawa's involvement will be limited to about $70 million for upgrading existing CNR track and building the coal port at Prince Rupert.

Phillips also revealed the spur line — estimated to cost between $215 million and $300 million — will not be built by the B.C. Railway.

He said the government intends to seek out the best engineering advice and the most efficient construction firms, build the line and then turn it over to the BCR.

NDP critic Gary Lauk demanded Monday that the government release all relevant documents and information on the financing of the coal development.

"We neither favor nor oppose this latest proposal for northeast coal development. There have been many proposals over the years. The latest proposal may be worth serious study," Lauk said.

"When the people have all the information, the people and the legislature will be in a position to make a rational judgement."

Crash victim belted for $185,000

VANCOUVER (CP) — Karen Bracey's failure to wear her seatbelt on June 23, 1975, cost her $185,000 Monday in B.C. Supreme Court when Justice J. G. Gould reduced her $741,075 auto accident award by that amount for contributory negligence.

And her decision to embark on what Gould termed a "potentially disastrous expedition" to a Bellingham, Wash., tavern, cost her an additional $111,000.

Total damages were assessed at $741,000, but Gould reduced the award by 40 per cent to $445,000.

Miss Bracey, then 26, received serious head injuries when the car in which she was riding as a front-seat passenger collided with another car that had spun out of control on Highway 401 about one kilometre west of the Port Mann bridge. As a result of her injuries she will require full-time care for the rest of her life.

Gould ruled that Marilyn Johnson, driver of the car in which Miss Bracey was riding, and David Thomas Agencies Ltd., owners of the vehicle, are together liable for 30 per cent of the total damages, and that Allan Marshall, driver of the car that went out of control, is responsible for the remaining 30 per cent.

Gould, in his reasons for judgment, said that on a Sunday morning three young women — Marilyn Johnson, Miss Bracey and Carol Ann Dixon — decided on the spur of the moment to go to the Bellingham pub and once there drank beer, talked, danced "and generally enjoyed themselves."

He noted that on the way back to Vancouver they were stopped by a highway patrol officer and told to get coffee and food before continuing, which they did.

Later, the car, travelling an estimated 38 km-h to 48 km-h struck the Johnson vehicle and Miss Bracey was thrown into the windshield.

"The plea of contributory negligence (by the defence) on the part of Karen for embarking upon, and taking part in, this expedition to the Bellingham tavern I think is tenable," said Gould. "I find that Karen was contributorily negligent in not looking after her own safety in the circumstances of this potentially disastrous expedition."

He said the women wore the lap portion of their safety belts when they crossed the U.S.-Canada border "for appearances sake" but that Miss Bracey was not wearing any part of it at the time of the accident.

Constitution talks could hit the road

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal-provincial constitutional talks scheduled to last throughout most of the summer could become a travelling road show.

Federal and provincial ministers meeting here today were placing 11th-hour telephone calls around the country to find suitable locations for the talks that Jean Chretien, federal justice minister and co-chairman of the discussions, estimates will last intermittently from 18 to 20 days.

In-depth talks on 12 key issues were not scheduled to begin until July 7, but a source at the meeting said the ministers may delve into some of the sticky issues today before heading home.

The ministers met today to set priorities for the summer-long talks — to decide in what order the 12 items on their agenda should be discussed first.

The federal and provincial ministers expressed cautious optimism as they entered today's meeting.

Saskatchewan Attorney-General Roy Romanow, co-chairman of the meeting, told reporters he expected the ministers would be able "to whizz through" many of the 12 items to be discussed this summer because of substantial agreement on many of the topics at previous conferences in 1978 and 1979.

For instance, the ministers had agreed previously to enshrine the principle of equalization — distributing wealth to poor provinces from rich ones — in the constitution and to shift family law to the provinces from the federal government, Romanow said.

Jean Chretien, federal justice minister and the other co-chairman, said the ministers were to set a timetable today for talks on the 12 key issues identified last week when Prime Minister Trudeau met the 10 premiers. Agreements on these 12 items are to be made final at a first ministers' meeting Sept. 8 to 12.

The federal and provincial ministers meet again July 7 to begin the in-depth talks on the 12 issues, which include ownership of natural resources, language rights, fisheries and Senate reform.

Both Chretien and Romanow said they were not bothered by what the Saskatchewan minister termed strident positions taken by some provinces in the constitutional talks.

Many of these provinces, which appeared to to be taking firm, intractible positions, were merely playing to the news media, Chretien suggested.

B.C. Rail won't build Sukunka spur: Phillips

Phillips, however, continued to keep a tight lid on what the final export price of northeast coal will be when all shipping costs are added in, and what it will cost the taxpayer.

He signed a memorandum of agreement with the coal companies Monday in which the provincial price commitment is spelled out but said it must remain confidential throughout the negotiations with the Japanese steel companies.

"Any politician that throws figures around is just being mischievous," he told reporters.

Various sources have spoken of a price of little more than $70 a tonne for northeast coal, compared to the $64 to $68 a tonne the Japanese currently pay for coal from southeastern B.C.

Lauk said a substantial govenment subsidy likely would be needed to get northeast coal out at around $70 a tonne.

"The question is, will that subsidy give an unfair competitive edge to the northeast over the southeast? After all, we represent both areas of the province," he said.

Phillips said it will take about two months to hammer out a coal agreement with the Japanese. Coal company negotiators left today to open talks in Tokyo Wednesday.

In the legislature, the NDP tried asking Premier Bill Bennett about the weekend collapse of the federal-provincial deal.

In reply they got an impassioned attack on the federal government, the CNR and the opposition members asking the questions.

Bennett contemptuously dismissed the federal offer of help as simply a loan.

"The federal government, in dealing with the request for a grant from B.C., offered a loan. As we're probably in far better condition, we don't need to borrow money from the federal government."

He suggested Ottawa, with its enormous deficit, might better look to B.C. for a loan.

"We are able to fully finance the development from our natural gas resource," he added.

Bennett said the federal government was given a chance to put its money where its mouth is, to show that B.C. is more than an area from which revenues are to be drained away."

Turning to the CNR he said the national railway flubbed its chance to be more than a timid, mainline carrier.

He said the decision was contrary to the spirit of railroad building that made Canada a nation and he questioned whether the CNR is serving its rightful purpose.

NOTICE TO SAANICH FARMERS AND GREENHOUSE OPERATORS

By-law No. 4451 adopted by the Saanich Council provides for a reduced water rate of 20 cents per 1000 gallons of water when used for irrigation purposes. To qualify, the water must be used solely for irrigation purposes and, the land must be classified as a farm pursuant to Section 26 of the Assessment Act 1974 SBC C6 or, be land designated as "Agricultural Land" under Section 8 of the Agricultural Land Commission Act 1973 SBC C46. Owners or duly authorized agents of owners may apply to the Municipal Engineer on the prescribed form for an agricultural water service connection to obtain the above referenced rate.

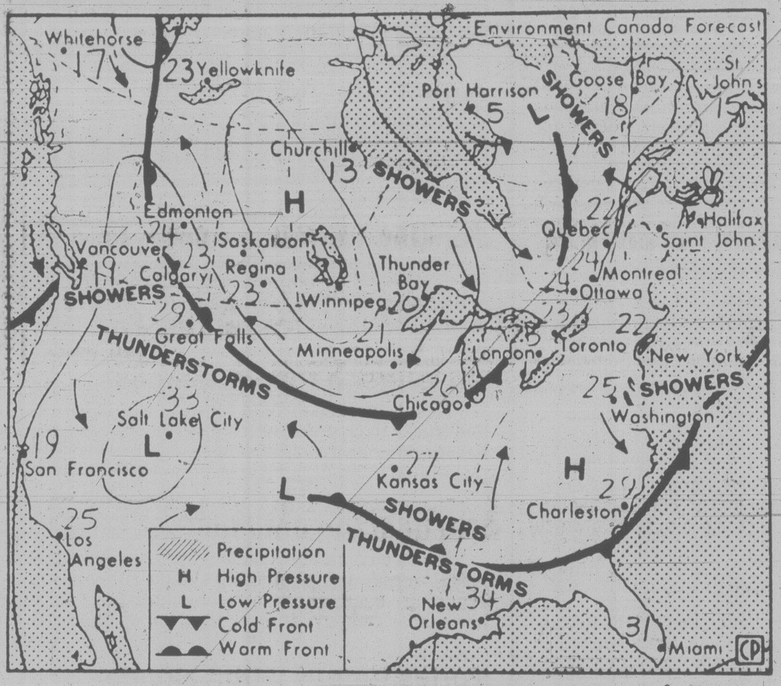

Map valid until midday Wednesday

Showers and thundershowers continued overnight in most regions. Some clearing occurred over the coast but more clouds were moving into the Queen Charlottes by dawn ahead of another Pacific disturbance. A gradual drying trend is forecast over the south coast today and Wednesday. The unsettled conditions will persist over interior regions through Wednesday while the new disturbance brings some rain to the north coast.

Tory firing squad forms its circle

OTTAWA — If Pierre Trudeau really meant what he said when he told his post-constitutional press conference that he would retire "soon" if he achieves sucess in September, there are at least a dozen Liberals quietly preparing their timetables.

The difference is that you don't hear anything about it.

The difference is that you pick up the Ottawa Journal and there, on one page, are three differenet stories on the Tory party that make the eyes spin and the balance wheel revolve back in time.

One story states how the rebellious president of the Quebec wing of the Conservatives is going to challenge Clark and Company on the deux-nations theory at the Tory convention in February.

The second story details how an Ontario member of Joe Clark's caucus will back a challenge to Clark's leadership at that same national convention.

The third story explains how the leaderless British Columbia Tories are going to split into federal and provincial wings — a further attempt by Pacific Coast Tories (who are called Socreds at election time) to put distance between themselves and Clark.

Just when the Liberals are so vulnerable, when their stiff-necked attitude toward Alberta and Western resources is leading them into a blind alley, the Tories form a firing squad in a full circle and start shooting.

In the aftermath of one of the world's quickie courses in government, the Tories are headed into the same dispute with Quebec that sank Robert Stanfield.

Stanfield went to bed with Marcel Faribeault in 1968 on the pillow of deux-nations and never really recovered from the shellacking he got from the voters — both outside Quebec and inside Quebec.

The Tories have been dying slowly but consistently in Quebec since even before Stanfield.

They've gone from 14 seats in 1962 to eight in 1965, four in 1968, three in 1972, two in 1979 and one in 1980.

That lone ranger, Roch Lasalle — personally picked by Clark as his Quebec lieutenant who sits proudly to Clark's right in the Tory front bench — stated last week that it is "the worst treason of the century" to suggest that Canadians are one people and not two.

Now here comes Marcel Danis, president of the Quebec wing of the Tories, stating the theory of two nations should be the cornerstone of the party's constitutional stance and that he aims to push that point at the February convention.

Danis, a good-looking, confident lawyer of 36, is going to cause Clark nothing but trouble.

He came to the Tories through the ranks of the Union Nationale, whose Premier Daniel Johnson first pushed the deux-nations theory into prominence 14 years ago.

The gutsy Danis is just one more example of the problems the Tories — even with Clark's demonstrated proof that he can campaign in French in the province — have in trying to get a foot in the door in Quebec.

Danis won the presidency last fall despite Clark. He opposed Clark's personally-approved candidate and has been bashing at his federal "superiors" ever since in a continuing dispute over financial and jurisdictional autonomy.

On the weekend, at the annual meeting of the non-existent B.C. provincial Tories, York-North MP John Gamble continued to unite the party in his own unique way by insisting that he will demand a test of Clark's leadership at the February national convention.

Gamble, who is nothing in Ottawa but is considered a frog-man for Bob Coates, the Tories' semi-loyal national president, claims that he's not in any dump-the-leader movement but is simply following the orders of his riding association. Obedience like that the Tories don't really need at the moment.

Adding to the lassitude of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, which seems stunned at the realization of its own retroactive ineptitude, is Joe Clark's listless performance.

Those around him say he is very much an in-and-outer these days, combative one day but sinking into despair — such as at last week's constitution do — at the realization of what he has flubbed away.

With the country supposedly headed down the constitutional home-stretch this summer, the party badly needs some leadership: visible, loud and articulate.

Duncan river brief rapped

DUNCAN — A draft version of the Cowichan Estuary task force report has been branded as political manipulation and unbelievable by area environmentalists and politicians.

The report, leaked to the media last week, recommends reduction of log storage in intertidal marches and sets out a policy of controlled industrial activity on the estuary instead of a ban.

The documents contain a memo dated May 30, 1978, from Jon O'Riordan, assistant director of the environment and land use committee.

"The issues faced in the Cowichan are very similar to those I am struggling with in the Fraser (River) study and I feel it should be useful to write down some of the principles I think could be developed," the memo states. "I don't think an inflexible stand on no further industry is acceptable or even desirable."

Jim Manly (NDP—Cowichan-Malahat) said the report is unbelievable in view of assurances by federal Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc two years ago that the estuary would be protected. He said he had written twice to LeBlanc without a reply.

Martin Lukaitis, chairman of the Cowichan Valley Regional Board, said the report appears to have been purposely leaked to get feedback from the public.

Birgitte Meacher, president of the Cowichan Estuary Preservation Society and a director of the B.C. Wildlife Federation, called it "pure political manipulation."

But Cowichan-Malahat MLA Barbara Wallace said the leak has forewarned the public.

"It's no surprise to anyone who's thought about it that the government is now in favor of industrial development in the estuary."

Cheekye contracts awarded

VANCOUVER (CP) — Four more companies have been awarded contracts totalling over $3 million by B.C. Hydro for work on the 500-kilovolt Cheekye-Dunsmuir power transmission line from the mainland to Vancouver Island.

The line is scheduled to meet increasing demand for electrical power on Vancouver Island and in the Sechelt Pennninsula and Powell River areas north of Vancouver.

The companies are Hallcraft Construction Co. Ltd. of Surrey, Cedardale Tree Srvices of Richmond, L and M Clearing Ltd. of Vancouver and J. R. Edgett Excavating Ltd. of Comox.

When Tom Nease is on the run to Europe

AIR CANADA IS THE WINNING WAY.

When you run a successful business like Adidas in Canada, you get to know what it takes to make a winner. And Tom Nease says Air Canada has what it takes, especially with their introduction of International Cabin.

From July 1, International Cabin service will be available on Air Canada's wide-bodied flights to Europe, providing even more comfort and convenience for our full fare economy passengers. Before, during and after the flight.

International Cabin service means you'll be guided quickly through First Class check-in positions and seated in a special section of the aircraft. During the flight there are extra touches, like a stereo headset and open bar* compliments of Air Canada. And a preferred choice of magazines and newspapers and first choice of freshly prepared gourmet meals — a choice between beef tenderloin Madagascar or duck à l'orange with Grand Marnier sauce, for instance. And again compliments of Air Canada, there's a fine range of wines and liqueurs to enjoy throughout your flight.

Ask your Travel Agent or Air Canada to book you full fare to Europe. And be one of the first to try Air Canada's convenient International Cabin service for business travellers.

Air Canada has more non-stop flights to Europe than any other airline flying out of Canada. And as Tom says, "International Cabin is now another reason why Air Canada is my winning way."

*Subject to Government approval.

Opting for the absurd

The 21-20 weighted vote by the Capital Regional directors last week to exclude Salt Spring Island from the transit service area was regrettable.

At the time, it was thought that the weighted vote could carry a motion only if a majority of directors also agreed. Since nine of the 15 directors opposed the exclusion of Salt Spring, it was assumed that the motion failed.

However, the provincial government amended the Municipal Act in May. Now the weighted vote, a system by which votes are distributed among directors on the basis of the population they represent, is the sole consideration.

Regional Board Chairman Jim Campbell has now requested that the Urban Transit Authority exclude Salt Spring residents from the Greater Victoria Transit Area.

If the UTA complies, Salt Spring Islanders will no longer pay a surcharge on B.C. Hydro bills, a tax paid by all residents in the Capital Regional District. The levy, which amounts to about $12 a year for each household, is to help cover the urban transportation system's expected $2.2 million annual deficit.

Salt Spring Islanders have argued strenuously that the surcharge, or any method of covering the deficit, is unfair because the bus system does not extend to their island. (Bus service is available from the Swartz Bay ferry terminal.)

There's a certain logic in the user-pay principle. But to apply the user-pay concept to one municipal service and not to others is to distort greatly the realities of modern day B.C.

People in remote areas of the province often complain they pay more in provincial and federal taxes than they receive in services. B.C. Ferries is a prime target.

The fact that everybody contributes to the $37 million annual ferry deficit does not rest well with many residents of McBride and Vanderhoof. Little value is seen in subsidizing Vancouver and Gulf Island residents and tourists. But no matter how infrequent their visits to Vancouver Island, the ferries are available to them.

On the other hand, when the provincial government distributes large chunks of money to their communities for the upgrading of highways or the subsidy of the B.C. Railway, the city dwellers of the lower mainland could be equally annoyed that their tax dollars are being used to subsidize northerners.

Neither argument holds water. If all community improvements and social services has been totally dependent on local resources, many amenities would never have been constructed.

The danger of applying the user-pay concept to municipal services is that it can be carried to absurd lengths. Imagine school taxes being levied on the basis of the number of children a taxpayer has in school. What could be fairer? And what about fire protection? Should a taxpayer be excused from a portion of his taxes if he never calls the fire department?

Rally of the non-political

The most interesting aspect of the B.C. Government Employees Union rally at the legislative buildings was not the speeches about pension changes for civil servants.

Nor was it the size of the crowd, although the number — variously estimated by police sources at between 4,000 and 6,000 — were dramatic and impressive.

More interesting though was the character of the rally. This was not Rent-A-Crowd, the small group of semi-professional protesters that turns up to oppose everything from environmental policies to welfare rates.

This was a crowd of the newly-politicized.

It was obvious from their clothing. It is a long time since anyone has seen protesters in neat business suits at a rally.

It was obvious from their behavior. They came, listened politely to the speeches, clapped and cheered. They had so little practice in chanting slogans that they couldn't keep together on the three-word, "Kill Bill's Bill." They didn't make silly suggestions about sit-ins, revolutions or charging the barricades.

It was obvious from their tactics. The last piece of advice from their leaders was that they all should write letters to their MLAs and the premier on the pension issue.

Whether the economic point of the government's pension legislation is valid — and this paper thinks it was — a large group of relatively non-political people believes its security is threatened by the government and is willing to take political action in response.

As the NDP discovered in 1975, it a prescription for trouble for a government.

"And if Mr. Trudeau calls a national referendum, my government will respond by sending me to Hawaii."

RICHARD GWYN

Terminal case of principles

OTTAWA — As a test of your taste, pick which of the following two people, A and B, you would rather be:

- According to his friends and enemies, A is "shifty," and "fat-cat" but also "successful" and "modern."
- Those who know B describe him as "principled" and "honest," but at the same time as "old-fashioned."

If, because worried by the tag "shifty" and attracted by the label "principled," you've decided you would prefer to be B rather an to be A, then, although no doubt outstanding in your trade as tinker or tailor, or soldier or sailor, or whatever, you'd make a lousy politician.

Party perceptions

The two people in fact are respectively the Liberal and Conservative Parties, and the attributes applied to each are the ways that voters think of our Natural Governing Party and our Permanent Opposition, according to a survey done for the Conservatives by Toronto pollster Allan Gregg.

The survey's purpose was to help the Conservatives to figure out how to escape from their sentence to perpetual opposition. Mostly, it demonstrates just how difficult this will be to do.

The survey shows that the Conservatives fare worst among upwardly mobile urban professionals and among young people. (Also among women, who declare, somewhat puzzlingly when you think of Maureen McTeer hanging on to her last name, that the Liberals are "pro-women").

Among the young and the professionals, the political come-on, apparently, is "modern." They concede to the Conservatives the Sunday school virtues, such as being principled and honest. But because they like to think of themselves as modern, they lean to the "modern" Liberals.

To update its appearance, the Conservative Party is thinking — a Canadian political first if it comes off — of bombarding the airwaves this fall with institutional, or image, TV ads (like the ones about how multinational oil companies really are working for you).

Plainly enough, this isn't going to be enough. In the last election, the Conservatives were driven back to their rural and Western strongholds, and lost some of their best and brightest MPs.

Still, the survey and the search for ways to be new and different that it has inspired, are the first signs that life has begun to flicker again within the Conservatives.

The "it," of course, was getting heaved out of office after just nine months in it. In the process, the Conservatives have added an image of ineptitude to their reputation for factiousness.

To quicken the process of healing, Clark has encouraged his MPs to pick at the old wounds. Through the past month, he's dined each week with a dozen or so backbenchers, and sat back to listen to them tell him everything he did wrong.

As part of the same process, Clark last week, in an appearance before the Ontario Conservatives, shouldered his share of the ignominy by blaming the defeat upon "the leadership." This week, he took the same message to Vancouver, to a meeting of British Columbia Conservatives.

In public, Clark plugs away as doggedly as ever. Even in private, apparently, he lets his spirits sag only on days when something dramatic is happening, such as the visit of Mexican President Lopez Portillo, or last week's gathering of the Premiers to wrestle with the constitution.

"He gets moody on those days," says an aide. "He watches Trudeau doing what he would have been doing, and it gets to him."

All of which is plucky, but beside the point. The key question, which doesn't need to be said anyway, exists for the Conservatives if there is any chance to change their image except by changing their leader.

Leadership contest

To complicate the equation, the Liberals by the next election will have picked themselves a new, and a properly modern, leader, who, on the odds, will be just about unbeatable. And Clark, who wasn't exactly modern in 1979 when he won, nor obviously in 1980 when he lost, will be even less so in four years time.

"You're missing the point," said a senior Conservative MP when I sketched out this scenario to him. "If we're going to lose the next election anyway, wouldn't we do better to lose it with Clark than waste a new guy on it.

Deep in the bowels of the Conservative Party, there is a little bit of life these days. But there isn't much hope.

Gratitude and fish don't mix

OTTAWA — The more restrained observers warned Canadians not to expect the outpouring of American gratitude for rescuing their diplomats in Iran to be followed with anything more tangible than letters of praise.

The realists, and not those predicting grateful Americans at the bargaining table, were of course right.

While Canadian ambassador Kenneth Taylor made frequent excursions into the United States to receive praise and keys to cities for smuggling the Americans out of Tehran, Canada-U.S. relations slid steadily downhill.

Canada accused Washington of joining with Moscow at the law of the sea conference to reach behind-the-scenes deals to the detriment of the Canadian nickel industry.

Fishermen need not be optimistic about fish treaty ratification.

Fish reprisal

Last week, the Canadian government initiated oft-threatened action and took reprisals against the United States for overfishing and failing to ratify a treaty both countries signed more than a year ago.

Dissatisfaction with American actions is the main area where External Affairs Minister Mark MacGuigan seems to have attracted publicity. He began raising questions about U.S. policy within days of assuming the prestigious post.

First he was angered by President Jimmy Carter's announcement, without consulting Canada, that use of coal would be increased to conserve oil. Air pollution, which does not respect political boundaries, will be increased at the very time both countries are supposed to be reducing acid rain.

The number of publicly expressed doubts about U.S. behavior has grown steadily since. MacGuigan has "a lot of reservations about the American foreign policy, about their lack of consultation, about their lack of adequate leadership."

The external affairs minister appeared before a House of Commons committee last week to, among other things, explain his remarks about Carter and U.S. foreign policy.

He provided the usual platitudes about good friends being able to openly discuss each other's shortcomings. Then the important message.

His concern about Carter's lack of consultation before acting, he said, was shared by virtually every foreign minister in the western alliance, a damaging split in a group supposed to provide a common defence.

This international concern, which has seen Canada moving closer to the European doubts about Carter, might not be so publicly displayed by the United States' closest ally if Ottawa was not so frustrated by America's lethargic handling of the east coast fishing treaty.

Concern about the U.S. administration's inability to deliver on the treaties it negotiates because of congressional opposition was the main subject discussed when U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance arrived for talks on April 23.

He assured Canada of Carter's support for the treaty, which had ended the "fish war" where ships of each country were banned from the other nation's waters. Vance also implied he would actively work for its ratification.

Unknown to Canadian officials, Vance was already preparing to leave his post in protest against the U.S. attempt to rescue their diplomats held hostage in Tehran. His resignation did not improve chances for the much-delayed ratification.

With Carter concerned almost entirely with the politics of winning re-election in November and the Senate now demanding changes Canada terms "totally unacceptable," hopes for approval were receding too fast to ignore.

Canada's decision to increase the fish quotas in the disputed waters was a tit-for-tat reprisal against the Americans for overfishing on other species, Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc said. Frustration turned to the open conflict the treaty was supposed to stop.

Attitude contrast

The most pointed contrast to the praise surrounding the Canadian rescue in Tehran was provided by a Canadian negotiating at the law of the sea conference. The U.S. attitude, he said, was "what have you done for us lately?"

Lately, what the United States has not done for Canada is approve the fishing treaty. The initial response of Washington — that the Canadian move could further delay approval — is not likely to be appreciated or considered much of a threat in view of present progress.

It is clear that the emotional gratitude over finding a friend in a largely hostile country does not translate into dollars and cents. Any realistic analysis would have expected that, of either country.

Additives

A funny thing happened on my way home, when I detoured to have a sip of B.C. Hydro's incomparable coffee, served free at the Stelly's Cross Road School recently.

We all know how sincerely B.C. Hydro does share our own concerns about "environmental and social impacts when developments such as electric generating plants and transmission lines are proposed".

And that's why this public information meeting was called, to tell the folks the truth about the new Pike Lake-Sidney transmission line.

Amongst other things, B.C. Hydro also engages in "vegetation management", which means brush removal from under the power lines.

I asked one of the attending B.C. Hydro staff how they will accomplish this task on the proposed power line. "By cutting" — he replied and pointed to the corresponding line in his Public Information Bulletin, which stated that, "Because the transmission route will run through settled areas and would be accessible, it is anticipated that vegetation management will be accomplished without the use of herbicides".

Obviously, this B.C. Hydro story teller wasn't aware of the situation in Sooke, also a "settled area", where it took a bunch of appeals to stop, hopefully for good, B.C. Hydro's herbicide spraying of a power line which runs through our community.

When I pointed out that we drink water from the creeks crossed by the power line, one of the present B.C. Hydro managers, a forester, disarmingly said: "If you only knew of all the stuff going into your daily bread, you wouldn't worry so much."

If this is so, why take all that trouble to preach one thing before the power line is built, and do the opposite afterwards? — John Willow, R.R. 2, Sooke.

Catholic politics

Lately Bishop De Roo gave a slide presentation in Victoria of his experience of Central America, which he visited just prior to the assasination of Archbishop Romero of San Salvador. Although unable to attend, I feel sure the lecture must have been worthwhile.

The weapons (intimidation, repression, oppression) being used to maintain things-as-they-are in that part of the world are plainly immoral. Surely it is time that the Church Bishop De Roo represents issued strict guidelines governing political morals? At the moment not even the Hierarchy has reached a consensus regarding what political/economic conditions can be tolerated and what means can be rightly employed to achieve a just solution of problems in civil affairs.

Apropos of that, would not the Pope and fellow Bishops speak with a clearer spiritual voice if there were no "Vatican State"? Under present circumstances it is quite clear that, being one of the world's tiniest political entities, the Vatican State has its arm twisted so to speak whenever Uncle Sam frowns on a particular Archbishop or the Politburo decides a Patriarch would not be expedient within the boundaries of the USSR. I think such a disestablishment of an anachronistic "Church State" timely, in the best interests of all of us right now. — R. B. D. Terry, 208-1180 Colville Road.

Clack report

The "Victoria Inner Harbor Development Recommendations" were prepared in 1974 by Roderick Clack. This report stressed the uniqueness of our Inner Harbor and set out the long-term goal of pathways along the water, in a natural setting, from Ogden Point to the Gorge.

Of special importance, I quote from page two of the recommendations:

"Building uses termed unacceptable because they would be incompatible with the development concept for the waterfront area, shall include: Conference or Convention Centres . ." — D. Carrick, 1382 St. Patrick Street.

No disruption

Should my government condone any disruption of service at our ferry terminals over the pension fund issue, it should have the decency to admit it's inability to manage our affairs and resign post haste. — F. Sutton, 7010 Seabrook Road, Saanichton.

Victoria Landmarks

In the Provincial Archives there is a photostat copy of a map of the Victoria area titled: Ground Plan of portion of Vancouver Island selected for New Establishment taken by James Douglas, Esq. Drawn by A. Lee Lewes, L.S. Adolphus Lee Lewes, son of Hudson's Bay Company Chief Factor John Lee Lewes, received his education in England as was often the custom for sons of company employees.

In 1839, Lewes entered the service of the Hudson's Bay Company as "Surveyor and Clerk for general service," arriving in Victoria by the annual supply vessel a year later. The following year, in 1842, Lewes prepared the first known Victoria land map. It was for the purpose of establishing a fort.

Before 1846, when the Oregon Treaty resulted in establishing the international boundary line between British territoy and the United States, there had been little need of surveys. But after 1849 when the Crown Colony of Vancouver Island was formed, settlers started to arrive. With land selling at a price of £1 per acre, the Hudson's Bay Company noted: "The want of surveys and local information has been much felt, persons intending to emigrate being materially desirous to see a plan of the locality in which they are to settle." The original of A. Lee Lewes' map is in the Hudson's Bay Company archives at Winnipeg.

'Sinister buffoon' at Sands

By CLIVE JAMES

(James is TV critic for the London Observer)

Idi Amin . . . a nut's self-righteousness

As if to demonstrate that the tangles democracies get into count as nothing beside the horrors of tyranny, Idi Amin made an appearance on the Nine O'Clock News. Exclusively interviewed by Brian Barron, Idi spoke from his mysterious hideout, which nobody except everybody knows to be the Sands Hotel, Jeddah.

That the BBC agreed with Idi to keep his whereabouts secret bespeaks a certain old-world charm, like the punctiliousness with which, during World War II, they are reputed to have paid Hitler's royalties into a Swiss bank account.

Idi's phone number at the Sands, incidentally, is Jeddah 692020. Give him a bell in the middle of the night and tell him you're the voice of retribution. God knows he's got it coming.

But Idi looked as innocent as a chocolate Easter egg as he faced up to Brian Barron's exotic vowels. "Hay," asked Barron, "did you get eight of Uganda?" Idi earned some marks for understanding the question, even if his answer left something to be desired in the area of veracity. He called his precipitate flight a Tactical Withdrawal.

There was a lot of emphasis on his determination to regroup and stage a comeback. Soon his country would call him. At this point the viewer was assailed by a profound sense of familiarity. Where had we heard it before, this talk of answering the people's summons? Of course! Oswald Mosley!

Idi stood revealed as a black Blackshirt. His rather pleasant dial, however, showed you just how little you can judge by appearances. A sinister buffoon whose idea of a good time is to make innocent people bash each other's heads in with sledgehammers, Idi has all the self-righteousness of the truly dedicated nut.

"I am fresh, strong and I am concerned with the question in Uganda." Uganda had better sort itself out pronto before Idi checks out of the Sands and comes back to look after his adoring flock. 'Most of them love me . . . they want me to save them from the chaos situation that is now happening in Uganda.' What made this last utterance particularly horrible was the element of truth in it. Apparently Uganda is now in such a mess that half the population would welcome Idi back just so as to have a maniac they could rely on.

A battle of blockheads

By MARJORIE NICHOLS
The Vancouver Sun

Yes, Clarence, that is a game of chicken being played by provincial employees and the Bennett government over pensions. If I were a betting woman, I'd wager my tap shoes that there aren't going to be any graceful retreats here.

It is one of those stupid battles in which the blockheads on both sides appear more interested in drawing blood than resolving the issues in dispute. Let us deal first with the blockheads on the government side.

It is difficult to imagine how the government could have been more ham-handed in introducing the legislation that will un-index the pensions of provincial civil servants, teachers, municipal employees, and university workers.

It was delivered into the legislature like a bolt of lightning from a clear blue sky. There were no prior discussions with the employees involved, no advance warning. Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe, the minister responsible for the bills, then played cute.

He pretended that these landmark bills were but a bit of housekeeping. Even curiouser was his reluctance to provide the government's rationale. The legislation, if properly explained and introduced, could have earned kudos for both Mr. Wolfe and his sagging government.

Like almost every other government fund in the country, the B.C. pension funds are in financial trouble. Mr. Wolfe's proposals to redress the problem are not draconian.

Indexing will not be dispensed with completely. Special funds will be established, with increased payments from both employer and employee, to offset the erosions caused by inflation. Good grief, Mr. Wolfe could have been a national hero overnight.

Here was a government with an original idea about how to deal with the universal problem of leaping off the costly indexing bandwagon. Well, Mr. Wolfe blew it.

He didn't attempt to explain it to the public. But, more important, he didn't even attempt to explain or discuss it with the 140,000 or so people who will be directly affected. Dumb.

It is almost as though the provincial secretary wanted the issue to be escalated. If that was his intention, the government employees swallowed the hook.

The unions and employee associations involved responded in true British Columbia pavlovian fashion: they took out ads damning the government, and then they took to the streets.

There is a reasonable argument to be put on the employee side, but they have not yet put it. No doubt about it, the people involved are being asked (or ordered, if you like) to give up a benefit they have come to regard as sacrosanct.

I think we all would react angrily and negatively if our employers arbitrarily sought to reduce any of our benefits. Pensions are a pocketbook issue and there is nothing that stirs the bile like a government poking its hand into our purses.

Anyway, here we are almost a month later. Mr. Wolfe, that nice man who is so concerned about the state of the public purse, has been in Paris convincing an international commission of B.C.'s willingness to put a few million down the drain in return for the dubious right to be host to an international transportation festival.

Bill Bennett? He's been in Kelowna, recuperating from the trials of the constitutional confrontation.

But perhaps the dumbest move of all was B.C. Federation of Labor president Jim Kinnaird's call for the government employees to band together to defeat the hated Socreds at the next election. That lost the government workers a lot of sympathy, with which they were not abundantly endowed to begin with. I mean, it's darn difficult for anyone in the private sector to become particularly exercised that government workers are going to lose part of a benefit that nobody else enjoys anyway.

The fact is that there is an opportunity here for B.C. to put itself on the map. The idea of a separate fund to offset inflation provides a fascinating premise.

What the unions should be asking for is a commitment by the province that the employer contribution will physically be paid into the inflation fund and that it will be independently administered. The pension investments should be removed from the political control of the minister of finance.

But why stop there? These Socreds seem to be so desensitized by their difficulties that they don't appreciate the political benefit that could be reaped through expansion of this novel pension idea.

Why not, for example, offer to let private employers and employees put contributions into such an inflation fund? The amount of money that would accumulate in the fund would be staggering. I may be wrong, but I think such a pension fund would quickly outstrip the B.C. Resources Investment Corporation as the largest local pool of capital.

There will be some who will blanch at the idea of taking flyers with pension funds. Well, it's not quite as daring as it sounds. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which has what may be the country's most successful pension fund, has done exactly that. The CBC fund, which is independently administered, has, I'm told, made investments in property throughout the country.

Why can't we break out of this petty navel gazing just once?

Pardons should be given in public

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

Canada's Criminal Records Act allows anyone convicted of a federal offence to petition the solicitor-general for a pardon. The process isn't a quick one; depending on whether the offender has broken a law or a regulation, he must wait between two and five years after the end of his prison sentence, probation or payment of fine, before appealing. But if the National Parole Board approves, and if the cabinet is willing, the appellant can have his record almost completely wiped out — and thanks to Section 6 of the act, only a few people will know about it.

Specifically, the solicitor-general may order anyone with a judicial record of the conviction to surrender it to the Commissioner of the RCMP. Any copies of the record on file with the government must be stored separately from other criminal records, and — this is the clincher — "no such record shall be disclosed to any person, nor shall the existence of the record or the fact of the conviction be disclosed to any person", unless the minister finds such disclosure desirable in the interests of the administration of justice, or the security of Canada or its allies.

This is not a power that is used only infrequently. These secret pardons, or their revocation, crop up with great regularity. In the May 10 Orders in Council it is reported that a free pardon and remission [illegible] was granted under one order, and four pardons under four other orders. In the May 17 Orders in Council two pardons were granted, and 10 pardons were revoked (which suggests that in 10 previous cases the cabinet has guessed wrong). On none of these cases is any information available to the public.

The philosophy behind the secrecy provision seems sound enough at first glance. The pardon frees a person to apply for jobs he might otherwise be ineligible for, and helps him escape from the nagging shadow of a criminal record. If pardons were to be made public, the government would in effect be announcing that the recipient had previously committed a crime.

The problem is that, being secret, the mechanism is open to the sorts of abuse which a locked door makes possible. The government tells the public, through a published list of orders in council, how many pardons are being issued; but the public has no way of knowing whether the process is being capably handled. Who is being pardoned, and why? More important, since the minister has wide and skimpily defined powers to revoke that pardon, whose pardons have been lifted, and why?

Beyond that, the secrecy leaves the public entitled to wonder if the power of pardon is ever exercised for political reasons, or if it condones — after the fact — promises made by Crown prosecutors which unduly benefit one offender in a case who has given testimony against other offenders. Does a special kind of plea bargaining go on of which the public, and even defence lawyers, are unaware?

The workings of our courts are open to public view for one simple reason: the public has a right, and a duty, to see that justice is being done. We learn who has been acquitted, and who has been convicted, and on what evidence. The granting of a federal pardon should be subject to at least passing review, with exceptions for those people — certain police informers, for instance — for whom publicity would prove a death warrant.

In recommending a pardon, the Parole Board is saying that an applicant is "of good behavior" and that his conviction "should no longer reflect adversely on his character". Why should this clean bill of health receive any less exposure than the news of his earlier misconduct?

The electronic cadger

Russell Baker

I went to a mail order store to order a tire-pressure gauge. "I want to order a tire-pressure gauge," I said to a woman at a computer terminal. "What is your telephone number?" she asked.

"218-2676," I said.

She played the phone number on the keyboard, then studied the results on the computer screen. "Your name is Herman Irving," she said.

"How did you know that?" I cried.

"You live at 723 Elm Street," she replied.

"Astonishing," I said.

She looked pleased.

"I'll bet you could get that machine to tell how old I was when I had the mumps and whether my liver is enlarged," I said.

She played the keyboard again. "You've never had the mumps," she said. "Just measles, whooping cough and scarlet fever. Appendix removed when you were 17. Eighteen stitches to close a bad cut resulting from an automobile accident when you were 39. Afterwards you were charged with drunken driving."

I smiled boyishly. "We were all young once," I said.

Privately, my mind's alarm system was going off. Here was something about Herman Irving I hadn't known. Drunken driving at 39, eh? That was a bit late in the day for a man to be operating machinery with a snoot full of gin.

"How's my credit?" I asked.

"What do you want to order?" she asked.

"A tire pressure gauge. The catalogue lists the price at $4.19."

She tapped the keyboard, then studied the screen.

"You're good for the $4.19," she said, "but don't try to order anything over $4.99."

"You mean I'm not good for $5?"

"Well," she said, "considering that the surgeon who took your appendix out when you were 17 is still waiting for his payment and that you bounced three cheques just last week at the Acme Liquor Store, Ned's Auto Repair and the Patience of Job Dry Cleaning Shop, I'm surprised we're willing to trust you for the $4.19."

"Let me see that screen," I demanded.

She touched a button, and the screen went blank before I could vault over the counter. "Computer-bank information is held in the strictest confidence for your protection," she said. "We cannot permit you to look at it."

I did not make a scene, but stalked out of the shop, walked across the parking lot and got into my car. Herman Irving was waiting on the front seat. "Did you get the money?" he asked.

"No."

"I thought you were going to the bank."

"Herman," I said, "I did not go to the bank. I just walked around and consulted my navel. It has advised me not to lend you the fifty bucks which you promised to pay back at the end of the month."

Herman said he was desperate for the money. "Not a chance," I said. "Something tells me you're a deadbeat, Herman. Something electronic."

"If I don't get that fifty bucks by sundown," said Herman, "there are two guys who are going to fracture the knuckles on my betting hand."

"I'm sorry, Herman."

"Think how much sorrier you'd be if your wife found out you bought a zircon necklace three years ago on the six-month payment plan."

Herman and I studied each other. "Your wife doesn't have a zircon necklace," Herman said. "I took the trouble of asking her. Now what kind of woman would a man buy a zircon necklace for?"

"You can't prove a thing."

"Pal," said Herman, "I know for a fact you made the purchase at Benny's Cut Glass Jewelry Bazaar in Chicago, because Benny had to complain to the Credit Bureau that you were 90 days behind on your payments."

I did not feel so good. "You must have ordered a tire pressure gauge recently," I said. "A jack handle, actually," he said. "All they asked me for was my phone number. I gave them yours. I never knew you'd been arrested as a kid for shoplifting bobby pins at the five-and-dime," he said.

"I wanted to give my mother a Christmas present," I said.

"We've all got our painful little secrets," he said, "and fortunately they're all in the data bank. And speaking of banks . . . "

I slid out of the car and walked over to the bank and withdrew $50, which was electronically recorded while I was being photographed by the seeing-eye camera for the record.

Canadian firm signs NASA deal

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian Astronautics Ltd. has signed a contract worth $3 million with the United States' National Aeronautics and Space Administration to build ground stations for an international satellite search-and-rescue system.

Bill Cox, vice-president of the Ottawa electronics firm, said the contract provides for construction and maintenance of three ground stations in the U.S.

Last month, the company signed a $1.3 million contract to build a ground station for the Canadian government.

The Canadian-developed ground stations are scheduled to be completed by the end of 1981 and will mean 10 new high-technology jobs.

Cox said the two contracts are the largest in the company's six-year history.

New York

Stock prices rose today as a small bank lowered its prime lending rate and the U.S. government reported that the personal income in the United States rose only 0.1 per cent in May.

The commerce department said the small gain in personal income offset a 0.1-per-cent decline in April.

UMB Bank and Trust Co., the New York subsidiary of an Israeli bank, cut its prime rate to 11.5 per cent. Major banks are still charging 12 or 12.5 per cent, but analysts expect the rate to continue to decline.

London

The London stock market as up moderately near the close of trading today.

The Financial Times index rose 1.9 to 469.5.

Industrials and oils firmed while Canadian stocks were generally lower.

How Saxon outruns Xerox.
(The Saxon 302 vs. the Xerox 2600)
Saxon starts faster. Our Saxon 302 compact plain paper copier starts faster and turns out copies quicker than the new Xerox 2600. That's just for starters.
Saxon runs easier. Our Saxon has superior features. Two paper cassettes holding more than double the paper supply of the Xerox 2600. Press-tone controls. A self-diagnostic system. And a few other advances Xerox hasn't caught up with.
Saxon runs you less money. With all this, the Saxon costs less to buy, rent or maintain than the Xerox.

Angry towing dispute flares in Saanich

. . . no room for visitors

A Saanich towing war escalated Monday with apartment owners and Gordon's Towing on one side and angry residents on the other.

In the middle sit aldermen and a proposed towing bylaw that may be scrapped as the result of the outcry.

Apartment and condominium managers say the towing bylaw should be abandoned because it places too many restrictions on the towing companies.

Towing is an essential service because non-residents continually park in tenant spots and plug fire exits, they say.

Municipal clerk Bob Sharp estimated 1,000 vehicles a year are towed from apartments and townhouses in Saanich.

Saanich residents, on the other hand, want the restrictive towing bylaw approved.

They say it is unfair cars are towed to Victoria because Gordon's Towing doesn't have a lot in Saanich.

The bylaw was drafted last December after a resident complained his car was removed from an apartment building in Saanich and taken to Victoria. The resident said he had to pay a $25 towing and storage fee.

The proposed bylaw prevents removal of vehicles from the municipality without the owner's permission and places a $16 limit on the towing fee.

It also requires apartment owners to post warning signs stating unlawfully parked vehicles will be towed away and giving the name and telephone number of the towing firm.

Gordon's Towing owner Gerald Hartwig said the company operates in Saanich at the request of apartment and condominium owners.

Hartwig said Gordon's, which operates from Vic West, gets most of the Saanich apartment work mainly because it has a 24 hour dispatch service.

Operating a lot in Saanich is not economically feasible because business isn't good enough, he said.

Ald. Irene Block said part of the blame for frayed tempers and complaints by residents lies with apartment owners and with council for not making sure enough visitor parking spaces are provided.

In other business, council decided to ask the other three Greater Victoria area councils to consider partnership in an asphalt paving plant.

The decision came after it approved a standing committee recommendation to award a $411,000 contract to Victoria Paving Ltd.

Bylaw limits vote expense

Saanich council next week will be asked to approve a bylaw limiting election spending to $5,000 by mayoralty candidates and $2,500 by aldermanic candidates.

The draft bylaw passed in a 4-3 vote by the standing committee Monday.

A bylaw recently approved by council calls for full disclosure of campaign contributions.

Ald. Bob Cameron, who introduced the second bylaw, told council he believes the public supports limited campaign spending.

"I frankly believe the public wants it," he said.

Ald. Geoff Vantreight, who proposed several accepted amendments to the bylaw, voted against it along with Ald. Mary Casilio and Sandy Noel.

Cameron was supported by Ald. Irene Block, Howard Sturrock and acting mayor John Mika.

Mayor Mel Couvelier and Ald. Ed Lum were not at the meeting.

Election expenses became an issue during the last municipal elections when allegations of a secret slush fund for certain business-backed candidates started circulating.

"If you have so few friends and so little influence on the campaign trail that you have to spend vast sums of money advertising in the newspaper to get elected, then what kind of a person are you?" Cameron said.

He said his draft bylaw is modelled after the federal election expenses bylaw and could act as a test case for other municipalities now considering similar legislation.

The motion was seconded by Sturrock, who said he has supported the concept of the bylaw for a number of years.

Under the proposed bylaw, all candidates are required to file a list of election expenses with the returning officer within 30 days following the election.

Candidates would also be required to list all contributions in excess of $100.

The draft bylaw also states no candidate shall accept contributions toward election expenses more than 30 days after the election.

A section limiting individual contributions to $250 was deleted at the urging of Sturrock, who said it is too easy to get around the restriction.

Ald. Block said the bylaw will not harm honest people.

"We're trying to catch people who aren't so honest," she said.

"Anyone spending a lot of money getting elected to a job that pays so little is somewhat suspect," Block added.

Ald. Casilio said the bylaw is an invasion of privacy and that it is too hard to enforce.

Ald. Noel said people can check at his bank if they are interested in knowing who made election contributions to his campaign.

"I don't want to be bylawed to death," Noel said.

Showdown at the oil price corral

By CAROLGOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — If words fail, and weapons are drawn, in the developing oil-price battle, the federal government has a whole arsenal. Alberta has one small, but very nasty, hand-gun.

By mid-summer, Canadians should know how nasty things are going to get.

The existing oil price agreement with Alberta expires in 13 days. Already Energy Minister Marc Lalonde is talking of imposing his will on the rebellious province and Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed senses an ugly confrontation in the air.

In theory, there is still time for a settlement. Alberta Energy Minister Merv Leitch flies into town tomorrow for a late burst of negotiations and although it is considered unlikely these talks will lead to a new agreement, officials still hope the two governments will agree there is enough room for movement that it would be worthwhile to bargain a few weeks past their July 1 deadline.

But the atmosphere is not promising.

Suppose — as many observers do — that this week's talks lead nowhere, that the current oil price agreement runs out and that Lalonde and Lougheed are forced into a confrontation.

The first logical step for Lalonde to take, as he himself has pointed out, would be to set a price for Alberta oil arbitrarily.

The federal energy minister has a clear legal right to do this under the Petroleum Administration Act. The six-year-old legislation gives the minister the authority to " establish, by regulation, maximum pricing for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil produced, extracted or recovered in (any) province."

Such action would be unprecedented. "There's never been a problem like this before," said a federal government lawyer. "We've never had to set prices."

But the Petroleum Administration Act, born in the tense atmosphere which followed the first world energy crisis in 1973, did provide for the menacing possibility of an eventual federal-provincial showdown.

Alberta, presumably, would want to fight back and the law provides it with a swift and painful way of getting its revenge.

The province could simply turn off the tap — refuse to sell its oil to the rest of the country.

The British North America Act, the much-debated British statute which set the rules of Canadian Confederation 113 years ago, spells out unequivocally that the provinces have "proprietary control" over the natural resources which lie within their boundaries.

The question of resource ownership has always been — and will continue to be — one of the most hotly-contested questions of the constitution, but for the moment the law appears to offer Alberta the opportunity to counter Lalonde's imposed price by denying Canadians its petroleum at any price.

This is where the battle gets messy.

The federal government, staring at the horrifying prospect of serious winter oil shortages, would be pushed into using its constitutional powers to override Alberta.

Ottawa could compel the province to provide oil for the rest of the country under three separate provisions of the British North America Act:

— It could claim that Alberta was interfering with the flow of interprovincial trade, which is a federal responsibility. A nasty jurisdictional squabble would undoubtedly ensue.

— Ottawa, which is empowered to act in emergency situations to ensure that "peace, order and good government" are maintained, could assume responsibility for domestic oil distribution. This provision of the constitution has been used as recently as 1975, when Prime Minister Trudeau invoked it as his grounds for the imposition of wage and price controls.

— The federal government could use its declaratory power. Ottawa would declare that, in the national interest, oil supply and pricing questions should be taken over by the federal government. "This is what everybody is getting all excited about," said a federal legal expert.

This provision of the BNA Act has become a little rusty with disuse in recent years, but has been invoked more than 470 timesin Canadian history to allow the federal government final say over such diverse areas as canals, local rail administration, dams, tunnels, harbors and bridges.

One of its more interesting recent applications was in the 1950s, when the federal government declared atomic energy to be a federal responsibility.

"It's obvious that there's no legal problem with declaratory power. The problem is a political," said a federal spokesman. "We take over oil wells and who's to say what would happen?"

So far, all the two governments have done is to dig out their weapons and polish them up for display purposes.

Nobody wants a shootout, but nobody intends to be caught unarmed.

Ex-fighter acquitted of kidnap

TORONTO (UPC) — A 39-year-old ex-prize fighter was acquitted Tuesday of charges he kidnapped missing millionaire businessman Fred Johnsen from his palatial Toronto home last August.

"Police made a grave mistake and I want to make it crystal clear that I had nothing to do with Johnsen's disappearance," Alan Bazkur told reporters after the jury returned its not guilty verdict.

Bazkur said Johnsen's wife, Lisa, was "in a daze" when she positively identified him as the man who had taken her husband at gunpoint from their newly purchased $545,000 home last Aug. 28. Johnsen hasn't been seen since.

Bazkur had testified that he was drinking in a Toronto bar the night Johnsen disappeared.

Opening lead — seven of hearts.

It is of course easier to play the dummy well if you see all 52 cards instead of only 26. But, even so, in most deals you're expected to do as well without seeing the defenders' hands as you would if you saw them.

For example, let's take this deal and assume you had the privilege of seeing all four hands. You'd easily make three notrump in that case. You would win the heart lead with the king, play a low diamond to the jack, cash four more diamonds and three clubs, and go on to the next deal.

But if you don't see the East-West hands, your task is much more difficult. You have no idea at trick one how the missing clubs and diamonds are divided, and you might find yourself going down in three notrump due to unexpected complications.

After taking East's queen of hearts at trick one, you might lead the king of clubs, followed by a low club to the ace. Actually, this seems a normal thing to do, but if you did it you'd never recover. You'd have to go down at least one, whatever you did next.

The correct method of play makes the contract, even though you don't see the adverse cards. You should lead a low club to dummy's queen at trick two, followed by a low club back to your king. If the clubs were divided 3-2, you would have nine sure tricks and you'd promptly cash them.

But when the clubs prove to be divided 4-1, you would now fall back on a second plan that you kept in reserve. You play a low diamond to dummy's jack, cash the ace of clubs, and then cash four diamonds. This brings you to the same nine tricks you would have scored if you had seen all 52 cards at the start.

However you slice it, lava 'loaf' unpredictable

Times News Services

VANCOUVER, Wash. — Despite the appearance of a growing dome of lava within the crater of Mount St. Helens, the volcano "is still capable of highly explosive and high-volume eruption," a U.S. government geologist cautioned Monday.

The conical dome, in the past few days has grown as high as a 13-storey building with a diameter greater than the length of two football fields, is being formed by lava pushing up from the floor of the massive crater created during the mountain's devastating eruptions on May 18.

White steam is rising from the edges of this circular mound by day, and at night spotter planes report that it is giving off a red glow. The surface, near the dome's top, is cracked and resembles the hard crust of a giant loaf of bread.

Formation of the dome, which apparently began growing after last Thursday's eruption, "doesn't mean that the eruptive episode is over," warned Donal R. Mullineaux, a volcano hazards experts with the U.S. Geological Survey.

Domes are formed when a pasty lava containing relatively little gas pushes up from a volcanic vent. And Mullineaux said that there are now increased chances for small eruptions, while chances for a large eruption remain the same as they have been for the last month.

Flows of hot rock and gas that can move rapidly out of the crater are also common events associated with the appearance of a dome, the geologist said.

The greatest danger area continues to be the north side of the mountain, where 648 square kilometres of forest were levelled by the May 18 blast. However, scientists are monitoring a slowly growing bulge on the mountain's southern flank.

At some point the mountain could begin to replace the 404 metres of the peak that was blown away during that first big eruption by building a dome. But it would take decades for the peak to regain its original height, scientists say.

Meanwhile, a light rain has reduced air pollution in Portland and Vancouver, Wash.

Since last Thursday, both cities have been bathed in a fog-like cloud of volcanic ash that has made breathing difficult and intermittenly disrupted air traffic.

In Idaho, the accumulation of volcanic ash in the forests is creating a nightmare for the logging industry.

"The dust in the trees is just as thick as the day of the fallout," a spokesman for the logging contractors said.

When a tree is cut down and it hits the ground, he said, it makes a dust cloud — lasting for "over eight minutes" and fanning out a distance of some 30 m — that creates a hazard for the loggers and reduces equipment life.

Batons, tear gas used

JOHANNESBURG (CP) — Police used batons and tear gas today to disperse hundreds of people who had barricaded streets and set oil drums and tires on fire in Bonteheuwel Township outside Cape Town, the South African Press Association reported.

Reporters and photographers were given five minutes to leave the area by a uniformed police lieutenant. The order was issued under new regulations barring the media from "trouble" spots.

Elsewhere, South Africa was quiet one day after a violence-punctuated fourth anniversary of the bloody Soweto riots.

At least 35 black and colored South Africans — including children as young as seven — were wounded Monday when police opened fire with shotguns on mobs of looters and demonstrators hurling stones and firebombs.

Scores of buses and police vehicles were also set afire or stoned as violence erupted in black and colored, or mixed race, areas throughout white-ruled South Africa.

But predicted work boycotts and mass meetings in black and colored ghettoes which fringe most white cities failed to materialize. Only sporadic violent incidents were reported Monday.

In the most serious incident of two days of simmering unrest, a white policeman was stabbed to death while taking part in a charge with riot sticks at a black township near Cape Town on Sunday night.

Police fired blasts of pellets from shotguns when they were stoned by crowds in the colored Johannesburg township of Coronationville. A police spokesman said 19 persons were wounded, none of them seriously. Fifteen more persons were wounded by police shotguns in a black township at Bloemfontein, and a black youth was shot in the leg in an incident in Soweto.

Last Friday the government moved firmly to squash black observance of the Soweto anniversary by banning all political meetings and memorial services of more than 10 people until the end of the month.

Riot police quickly dispersed crowds which gathered on Sunday and Monday in Soweto, where rioting on June 16, 1976, touched off country-wide disturbances in which at least 600 people were killed.

Tear gas was used to disperse crowds in areas close to a number of major cities, including Durban and Cape Town.

Police also clamped strict new restrictions on media coverage of trouble spots after accusing foreign journalists of inciting black youths in Soweto to throw stones.

Soviet reactors thin edge of Libyan nuclear wedge?

WASHINGTON (CP) — U.S. state department officials said Monday they are "keeping a very close eye" on Libyan efforts to buy nuclear technology, but are unable to confirm that Libyan strongman Col. Moammar Khadafy is trying to acquire nuclear weapons.

U.S. officials say Khadafy, a fiery-talking revolutionary leader, is on the verge of receiving two nuclear reactors from the Soviet Union, but it appears the transaction is being held up by Soviet insistence that Libya first sign a nuclear safeguards agreement to permit on-the-spot international inspections.

The reactors are, at least ostensibly, for a university research project and for a water de-salinization plant in Libya, U.S. officials say. The Soviet Union has said it will control the reactors' fuel supply, collecting spent fuel to prevent the Libyans acquiring weapons-grade plutonium that is vital for making an explosive device.

U.S. officials say they are also keenly aware of reports that Khadafy is willing to buy, or even to steal, the technology for making a nuclear bomb. But they say none of these reports has been confirmed.

Libya signed a nuclear non-proliferation agreement three years ago, but so far has not accepted an accompanying safeguards agreement to permit international inspectors to ensure it follows terms of the non-proliferation pact.

There is also circumstantial evidence, U.S. officials say, that Libya has with Pakistan's help bought "yellow cake" — a stage of processed uranium ore well below weapons-grade material.

Meanwhile, the BBC reported that Pakistan was developing a nuclear bomb with financial help from Libya.

On a BBC public affairs program Monday, it was predicted Pakistan would test a nuclear device in 18 months and that India, which has exploded a nuclear device, might wage war on its neighbor and traditional enemy to prevent its developing a nuclear armory.

TOWN TALK

While public service workers protested government pension legislation outside the legislature, their leaders were being extended a traditional courtesy inside.

Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe, the man responsible for the controversial legislation, asked the house to provide the usual desk-thumping recognition for BCGEU president Norm Richards, B.C. Federation of Labor president Jim Kinnaird and two other B.C. Fed executives, David McIntyre and Ray Mercer.

"These and other gentlemen are in attendance today," he told the house with a grin.

NDP MLA Ernie Hall (Surrey) chided Wolfe for forgetting Shirley Mathieson, president of the Ferry Workers Union, another organizer of the big demonstration. She got a separate round of applause.

Sealand president Bob Wright had the matter checked out and discovered it was a purple cutout of a whale, torn in two and probably part of the remains of a high school graduation celebration.

Tongue-in-cheek, Wright observed, "Even we can't put it together again."

"That's the only thing the province ever got from the CNR," said Premier Bill Bennett Monday. He was referring to a red-and-white cap emblazoned with a CN Rail crest which he wore as a trophy of B.C.'s abortive attempt to get the CNR to build a $300 million spur line into the coal fields of northeastern British Columbia.

Bennett took off the cap to enter the house, where he tore a strip off CN for failing to live up to the spirit of railroad building that made Canada a nation.

Sarah Davidson of Masset on the Queen Charlottes sees trouble ahead if the B.C. Ferry Corp. sticks to its policy of not handling boxes for walk-on passengers.

She phoned last week in a bit of a tiff after finding out at Swartz Bay ferry terminal that the boxed items she and her husband Claude were carrying wouldn't be taken on the ferry and put on the bus.

They eventually went to the Pat Bay airport and took a morning flight to Vancouver.

Betty Nicolson, ferries' information officer, explains that the long-standing policy not to handle foot-passengers' boxes and certain other things is in the passengers' self interest.

Often the boxes aren't packaged properly or contain fragile items and if they were handled by the ferry employees goods might be lost or damaged.

Mrs. Davidson says that policy will be hard on the Queen Charlotte Islanders when B.C. Ferries begins its service to the Island from Prince Rupert in October.

Many of the native people and residents don't have luggage and are accustomed to carrying things in boxes.

Thousands of public sector employees mass on legislative lawn during Monday's pension rally

More action looms in wake of massive pension protest

By MIKE HUGHES

Public sector employees got their meeting with the provincial government today but the threat of further action still exists unless pension legislation is withdrawn.

Norm Richards, president of the B.C. Government Employees Union (BCGEU), made that clear Monday to a cheering, clapping crowd, estimated by police to number close to 6,000.

The gathering on the legislative lawn was the largest in recent years and capped a series of 17 rallies held around the province to protest the planned pension amendments.

Last week in Vancouver, Richards said BCGEU officials would hold a special conference to plan further action if Premier Bill Bennett didn't agree to a meeting this week to discuss the pension issues.

On Monday, only hours before the rally kicked off at the McPherson Playhouse, Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe announced the meeting for today.

But Richards told the rally there will be further action unless the pension legislation is scrapped.

He also called for an immediate start on formal consultation with the union and an inquiry into pension investments.

Richards reiterated his charge that the government is using scare tactics to try to convince public service employees that their pension plan is in poor shape.

"The facts say otherwise," said Richards.

He said the various pension plans for the different public sector groups should be treated separately.

As for the public service superannuation plan, the one covering his union members, Richards said it is in better financial shape than any in the country.

He said that according to latest figures there is $687 million in the plan.

"It is projected that any unfunded liability in our pension plan will dissappear without change in premiums within 10 years," he said.

In 1978, $38.7 million went into the plan and $22.4 million came out in pension benefits, he said. The comparable figures for 1979 were $42.4 million and $27.9 million.

"It is obvious that the government is trying to mislead people into thinking that the pension plan is going broke."

The average return on the BCGEU plan over the past 10 years has been 6.5 per cent, he said. Last year, the interest rate was 7.5 per cent.

If the rate of return was increased one per cent, the extra $7 million a year would finance the COLA payments to all pensioners, he said.

The focus of the public sector employees' wrath is legislation which would increase by half a per cent the employee's contribution to the plan and limit cost-of-living increases to eight per cent in any one year.

The pensions now have open-ended indexing, meaning benefits rise on a percentage basis along with the Consumer Price Index.

Jim Kinnaird, president of the B.C. Federation of Labor, repeated what he had said at other rallies — that unless the government keeps its hands off, there will be a major confrontation with organized labor in the province.

He said the Bennett government is having trouble with its image.

"Bill is on a downhill ski slope," he said.

"There's only one place he's going to go in the final analysis, right to the bottom, right down."

The rally began at 1 p.m. at the McPherson Playhouse with speeches from other union officials and then a march down Government Street.

Because the government employees were off the job in the afternoon, liquor stores were closed and other government business disrupted.

Ferry workers held their own study sessions, resulting in a number of cancelled sailings.

He leaps to avoid fighting

A 22-year-old man jumped off the Johnson Street bridge rather than get involved in a fight early today, city police said.

A police spokesman said Irving Theodore Louie was walking across the bridge about 5:30 a.m. when four youths he had fought with earlier started running after him.

Police said Louie climbed the railing at the north end of the bridge and jumped into the water.

A passer-by reported the incident to police but by the time officers arrived, the youths had scattered and Louie had reached shore.

Heritage fears for 105-year-old Truth Centre building

Historic home to go?

Heritage buffs are worried that the Victoria Truth Centre has plans to expand its church at 1201 Fort.

They fear it might mean demolition of historic Pentrelew, a 105-year-old mansion which once was the home of B.C.'s first attorney-general.

"We've just heard from various sources that something is happening up there," said architect John Keay at a meeting Monday of city council's heritage advisory committee.

In a decision which requires council endorsement, the committee voted to add the house and grounds to the primary list of heritage buildings in Victoria.

It means if the church applies for demolition or building permits, the heritage committee must be notified, at which point it could take further steps to protect the building, including formal designation as a heritage structure.

Dr. Emma Smiley, minister at the Truth Centre for 40 years, said it is too early to comment on the church's plans and in two or three months the Truth Centre will make a public statement.

The Truth Centre has occupied the house since 1949. It was built in 1875 for Henry Pering Pellew Crease, Victoria's first barrister and founder of a well-known legal family who arrived here in 1858.

He was elected to the legislative assembly and became attorney-general when B.C. was still a British colony.

Pentrelew — Cornish for "house on land sloping two ways" — is described as once the foremost residence in the province by Martin Segger and Douglas Franklin in their book on Victoria's architecture.

It was built among five acres of gently sloping lawns, formal gardens, tennis courts and orchards. The architectural style was high Victorian Italianate, according to Segger and Franklin. Much of the details and decorative work were removed in this century, but three acres of the original property remain.

Tsehum appeal to Rogers

The B.C. Agricultural Land Commission has turned down an appeal by North Saanich council over the removal of 25 acres at Tsehum Harbor from the Agricultural Land Reserve.

But council hasn't given up the fight.

At a meeting Monday night aldermen agreed to appeal the decision now to Environment Minister Stephen Rogers.

Municipal clerk Ed Fairs said today a letter will be sent out later this week.

The property was removed from the ALR last year despite council's opposition.

Porperty owner North Saanich Marina Ltd. has applied to build a small subdivision on half acre lots at the site.

That application is now before municipal approving officer Darrel Ashby. He has been given until July 8 to come to a decision.

Council also decided to hold a special meeting at 3 p.m. Thursday to hear a proposal by the recreation commission for expanding the facilities at Panorama Leisure Centre.

It is understood the commission is contemplating building squash and handball courts and making other improvements at the centre but the details have not been released.

'Third-rate' fire service prompts call for report

Esquimalt Ald. Larry Mann says the municipality's unified police and fire department is providing only third-rate fire service and he called for the B.C. Police Commission to release a report about the service presented verbally last year.

Mann says in a press release issued today police commissioner G.L. Dalton should release his report to the public "so that residents have the true picture of the very unsatisfactory conditions existing in the combined police-fire force, and the at best third-rate fire protection being provided the residents of Esquimalt."

Mann's comments follow a decision made by council Monday to call for the resignation of the police board for its rejection of a proposal to improve the existing methods of running the combined police and fire department.

Esquimalt Police Union president Sgt. Bill Wyatt said the union will not join council's call for the police board to resign but it says the existing method of running the combined police and fire department cannot continue.

Council called for the resignation of the police board because of its decision last week to turn down a proposal to improve the method of providing combined fire and police services to the municipality and increase the department's staff.

. . . wants true picture

Mayor Ken Hill, who sits on the police board along with a municipal appointee and three members appointed by the attorney-general's ministry, said the board was divided on the question.

He and the municipal appointee supported the proposal but the other three members opposed it.

Wyatt suggested that if the board wouldn't go along with the recommendation, which was developed by the union and a committee of council, the next choice would be to consider a proposal from the union that the municipality form a small local fire department.

He said the union still opposes the first suggestion from council that the municipality contract out its fire department needs to Victoria.

Nursing home safety in stages

City council's fire prevention committee today approved a compromise in which the owner of a Victoria nursing home will carry out several improvements for fire safety immediately and complete the rest by the end of 1981.

Lawrence Hitchmough, owner of Grant Place, 998 Humboldt, and the fire department worked out an agreement following an initial meeting with the committee at which he said doing everything at once as ordered by the department would put him out of business.

The agreement specifies that Hitchmough will upgrade the fire alarm and detection system, improve exit signs and emergency lighting and rectify dead-end corridors and access to fire exit stairways.

Insp. Gordon Ferris of the fire department said the owner agrees that the safety of the patients at Grant Place is paramount, not the safety of the building, so the improvements mentioned will be done first. The committee set a deadline of Oct. 31.

Hitchmough asked for two to three years to carry out the rest of the upgrading but the aldermen gave him until Dec. 31, 1981.

The committee also got into an argument with Fire Chief Eric Simmons on the recent controversy over his department's fire safety upgrading program and scheduled a special meeting involving aldermen, the provincial fire commissioner, senior city staff and the fire department to get to the bottom of the issue.

Ticat passing wrecks Lions

Times News Services

HAMILTON — British Columbia Lions went back to work on pass-defence problems today as they continued preparations for the regular Canadian Football League season.

Pass-defence and reserve quarterback strength were found wanting Monday night as Hamilton quarterback Bruce Lemmerman picked apart the Lions for 25 minutes Monday night, then watched from the bench as the Tiger-Cats finished off a 29-19 pre-season exhibition victory.

Running back Ronnie Rowland dived over from one yard out on two occasions to account for Hamilton's two touchdowns. Bernie Ruoff took care of the rest of the Hamilton scoring by booting five field goals and two converts.

The Lions' touchdowns came on a 97-yard kickoff return by Leo Sloan and a one-yard run by John Henry White. Kicker Lui Passaglia had a field goal, a convert and a 48-yard single. Al Charuk caught a pass from quarterback Joe Paopao for a two-point conversion in the fourth quarter, accounting for the other B.C. points.

Lemmerman's pinpoint passing, directed primarily at Canadian tight end Rocky DiPietro, carried the Tiger-Cats to a 20-7 halftime lead. Dave Marler replaced Lemmerman, who joined the Tiger-Cats in a recent trade from Edmonton Eskimos, late in the second quarter.

The B.C. offence came to life in the second half under Paopao after Mike Nott and Roy Dewalt failed to solve the Hamilton defence in the opening 30 minutes.

The Tiger-Cats dominated the first quarter scoring 10 points and not allowing the Lions a first down.

White was the leading rusher in the game, gaining 63 yards on six carriers for the Lions.

Gaddis caught four passes for 73 yards for Hamilton, while DiPietro made 70 yards on four catches.

Marler completed seven of 17 pass attempts for 119 yards and Lemmerman was good on eight of 12 for 112 yards. Paopao completed 10 of 19 passes for 184 yards.

Duran power worries Sugar

MONTREAL — Repeated talk of the vaunted punching power of Roberto Duran, the top contender for the World Boxing Council welterweight crown, has left champion Sugar Ray Leonard unusually testy.

"I don't think he hits any harder than Marcus Geraldo, and he hit me the best shot I've ever taken," said the 24-year-old Leonard of Palmer Park, Md., who is continuing workouts in preparation for his Friday night bout against Duran at Olympic Stadium.

"If I could take Geraldo's best shot, I don't see how Duran's going to put me down," Leonard said, referring to his unanimous decision in a 1979 fight against Geraldo.

"And don't forget, when you talk about Geraldo, he was a full-fledged middleweight when we fought. He had the weight and the size, and he was able to muscle me pretty good, but I managed OK."

Leonard, growing more impatient and withdrawn as he nears the second defence of the title he gained from Wilfredo Benitez last November, also lashed out at questions pertaining to a possible rematch with Duran.

"Look," said Leonard, "I don't intend to have a rematch. I have every intention of winning this fight so decisively that it will put an end to any rematch talk."

Janks Morton, one of Leonard's trainers, wasn't surprised that the strain has started to get to the champion, undefeated in 27 professional fights.

"It's understandable," he said. "The pressure's starting to build, and I think Ray is as ready as he'll ever be right now. In fact, maintaining that superb condition and the mental attitude for the next five days is our big challenge."

Duran, meanwhile, celebrated his 29th birthday Monday but was back in the ring after two days off, hoping to maintain the fine edge he honed while training at Grossinger's in the Catskill Mountains.

"I'm not worried about him overtraining," said Ray Arcel, the 81-year-old co-trainer of the bull-like Panamanian, who has won 71 of 72 professional bouts. "We're going to see to it that he doesn't overtrain. That's one of the reasons he took some time off."

Don Morgan, a favorite sparring partner of Duran because "he says I'm the only guy he can hit in sparring and I won't run," has emerged from the sessions in awe of the former lightweight champion.

"Personally, I think Duran may be the greatest fighter ever to come along, and I'm convinced he'll take Leonard," said Morgan. "Leonard, or anyone else in the division, isn't ready for a man like this."

There were growing indications Monday that perhaps boxing fans aren't ready for Duran, either, as ticket sales for the fight had barely surpassed 25,000.

The Olympic Installations Board, the Quebec government agency that oversees the operation of Olympic Park facilities, bought the rights to the fight for $4.15 million in Canadian funds and had hoped to fill the 77,000-seat stadium. But it must double present ticket sales this week to go beyond the break-even point.

Ringside seats are priced at $500, with other tickets descending to $20.

Team selected

POWELL RIVER — Eleven athletes from Greater Victoria — four girls and seven boys — earned berths in the British Columbia Summer Games competition Aug. 14-17 at Kelowna during Zone VI track and field trials here at the weekend.

Linda Martin of the Flying "Y" earns spots with victories in the 100 and 200 metres and was picked for the 4 x 100 relay team while Rhonda Marshall of Central Junior High School qualified with a victory in the long jump.

Laurie Sawyer, who was second in the 80-metre hurdles, and Alex-Steele Mortimer, who was second in the 200 and picked for the 4 x 100, will represent Victoria Track Club.

Ken Wilmshurst of Victoria Mercuries won the 800 and 1,500 and was selected for the 4 x 400 squad while Steve Bogdanski of VTC made it with wins in the javelin and triple jump and was picked for the 4 x 100.

Evan Seal of the "Y" won the 100-metre hurdles, finished second in the high jump and was named to the 4 x 100 team while clubmate Mark Dornan qualified with a victory in the decathalon.

Karl Molineux had seconds in the 800 and triple jump and was named to the 4 x 400 team while clubmate Allan Dobie finished second in the 1,500 and Paul Harris of Stelly's High School was runner-up in the javelin.

Things will be refreshing while Gattis pilots Blues

By ERNIE FEDORUK

Regardless of how the decision on serving beer in the stands comes out, Jim Gattis has already produced a refreshing atmosphere at the ball park.

The youthful manager of Victoria Blues, the class A Northwest Baseball League team, comes across as a refreshingly honest individual.

The Blues open their campaign against Walla Walla Padres tonight at Royal Athletic Park, starting at 7, and Monday was a good time to assess possibilities.

Quite often, on the eve of a new campaign, team leaders wax enthusiasm and lay on heavy coats of optimism. There might be promises of instant championships, of hitters who will level fences in all parks, and of pitchers who will lay a string of goose-eggs that will stretch from East Sooke to Punkeydoodles Corner, Ont.

Gattis, only 25 and experiencing his first taste of managing at the professional level, has enthusiasm and optimism. But all of it is tempered with honesty, and without irresponsible, lay-it-on-thick promises.

Ask him about hitting, for example, and he responds: "Hitting is a little suspect. We have people who can put it out of the park, but not every day. It looks like a team that will have to banjo the opposition . . . with singles . . . and with speed to get extra bases.

"It may not be awesome power, but we should hit for a good average."

Gattis feels pitching and defence "could be" the team's strong points.

"Pitching, however, will have to be consistent with the team's progress," he said. "Don't look for anyone to go the distance at this stage of the season. Even if they're breezing along, I doubt if you'll see anyone go more than five innings.

"They've been working hard, but they're still a long way from being in mid-season form.

"What will be the sense of us winning 15 of our first 20 games if we don't have any pitchers left at the end of the month?

"The name of the game is to win, and I think we can. You do that with a team, and we're just getting to know each other, so we may have to scrape along for a while."

Gattis was ready to offer a starting lineup Monday, but indicated that roster changes will be made "if we have to." Gattis will stand pat, more or less, for the first two weeks. Blues play Walla Walla again Wednesday, then face Bend in a two-game series Thursday and Friday before taking off for a nine-game road trip.

"Those first 13 games will tell us if we have to make any changes," said Gattis.

One new pitcher is to report today. Al Areittea, a pitcher from the Minnesota Twins organization, will boost to nine the total number of pitchers on hand.

While announcing the new man, Gattis was taken away by a telephone call.

"That was Jerry Kendall, coach of the University of Arizona, the national collegiate champions," Gattis said on his return. "He has players for us if we need them.

"At the moment, we don't."

Righthander Mike Otto, a graduate of Pepperdine College, is ticketed to start tonight.

Speedy Lazondo Washington, holdover Nick Belmonte and Ken Goodman will start in the outfield. The catcher will be Don Hyman while Barry Moss, at first; Leo LaSalla, at second; Rod Murphy, at shortstop, and Joe Lorenz, at third, will round out the infield.

Lorenz is a question mark because of a bruised calf muscle. If he is not able to start, LaSalla will play third with Dave Fanseco starting at second.

Gattis, who was baseball's No. 1 draft (by Atlanta Braves) in 1972, will bat as the designated hitter. Playing, however, will not be a full-time thing for him.

"My idea is not to play but to manage," he said.

Griffith sisters dominate meet

POWELL RIVER — It was very much a Griffth family affair Sunday when the two-day Vancouver Island track and field championships for athletes aged 17 and under ended here.

Fiona and younger sister Marsha Griffith between them won eight titles in the meet which also doubled as a trial to select members of the Zone 6 team to the B.C. Summer Games in Kelowna.

Marsha, in fact, was the most impressive of the Griffith sisters who compete for the Victoria Flying Y Track Club, placing first in five events — the 200 metres in 32.1 seconds, the 400 in 73.0, the 800 in 2:48.2, the 1,500 in 5:47.4 and the long jump with a leap of 3.65 metres — in the 10-year-old girls' division.

In the 13-year-old girls' division, Fiona Griffith won the 400 metres in 68.4 seconds, the 800 in 2:35.7 and the 1,500 in 5:23.3 and she was third in the 200 metres in 29.3.

Kollette Bourne and Lindsay Davidson, both of the Victoria Track Club, won four events each.

In the 12-year-old girls' division, Bourne won the 200 metres in 29 seconds, the 800 in 2:40.7, the 1,500 in 5:32.3 and the long jump with 4.26 metres.

Davidson won the 11-year-old girls' 100 metres in 14.6, the 200 in 30.9, the 400 in 71.4 and the long jump with a distance of 3.73 metres.

Her clubmate Steve Bogdanski, competing in the 14 and 15-year-old boys' division, won the triple jump with 12.20 metres and the javelin with a throw of 47.90 and was also third in both the long jump and high jump.

Victoria Mercuries' Ken Wilmshurst was very impressive in the 14 and 15-year-old boys' section, winning the 800 metres in 2:03.9, his best personal time ever, and the 1,500 in 4:16.9.

Competing for the Flying Y, Ann Batters was first in the 100 metres in 14.0 seconds and also won the 200 metres in 30.5. That was for 12-year-old girls and in the 14 and 15-year-old girls' division, Flying Y's Linda Martin won the 100 metres in 12.3 and the 200 metres in 26.9. She was also third in the long jump with a leap of 4.90 metres.

In the 12-year-old boys' section, Arron Dornan of the Flying Y won the 800 metres in 2:35.5 and the 1,500 metres in 5:12.5.

Adanacs clinch berth in Cup event

COQUITLAM — Coquitlam Adanacs captured the Western Lacrosse Association berth in the Nations Cup world championship by felling Nanaimo Timbermen 17-9 Monday before 900 fans.

The five-team world championship tournament will be played in Vancouver and Victoria July 10 to 18. Other teams will represent eastern Canada, native North American Indians, the U.S. and Australia.

Coquitlam dominated the game, leading 5-2 at the end of the first period and 11-4 at the end of the second.

Esquimalt Legion, which boasts three of the top five scorers in the league, will play host to Burnaby Cablevision in Western Canada Major Junior Lacrosse League play tonight at 8 in Esquimalt Sports Centre.

John Crowthers leads the league with 27 goals and 58 points while clubmate Jim Lightbody sets the pace with 32 assists and is tied for second place with Rob Johnston of Richmond Roadrunners at 50 points each.

Terry Jay, with 17 goals and 46 points, is fourth and trails Geordie Dean of Coquitlam Adanacs by one point.

Victoria Budgets received some bad news involving two of their key softball players Monday.

Left-handed pitcher Mark Smith suffered a 30-stitch cut on his right arm at work and will be out of action for two to three weeks and starting third-baseman John Green has been called up by the Canadian team.

Smith has a 9-2 record and an earned-run average of 0.38 while Green is hitting .261 and leads the team with 11 runs-batted-in.

Green, however, will still be available when Budgets face Santa Rosa, Calif., in Super Series doubleheaders Saturday and Sunday at Royal Athletic Park.

Jennifer Bland of Victoria has gained the semi-finals of the Canadian under-21 tennis championships at York University.

Burnside representatives captured both Vancouver Island pairs berths in the B.C. women's lawn bowling championships which start Friday on Vancouver's Stanley Park greens.

Marg Atherton and Isy McLeod won the "A" side of the trials at the weekend while Leona Peterson and Flora Martin captured the "B" berth.

Though Vancouver Island Rep teams didn't do too well in the B.C. Junior field hockey championships in Vancouver on the weekend, two young Victoria players were selected to represent their province.

Rod Swindells was named to the B.C. under-17 team and Jeremy Ross to the provincial under-14 side and both will play for B.C. squads at the Western Canadian junior championships in Calgary June 21-22.

The Island had rep teams in the under-21, under-17, under-14 and under-11 divisions and picked up the bronze medal in the under-11.

High-flying Giants shoot down Expos

Times News Services

Thanks to the San Francisco Giants, Pittsburgh Pirates have all but caught the Montreal Expos.

Pirates pulled into a tie on games with Montreal in the National League East and trail by only the slimmest of percentage-point margins after downing Cincinnati Reds 5-3 before the Expos lost 5-1 in San Francisco Monday night.

For the high-flying Giants it was the fifth win in seven games and for Montreal it was the third loss in a row.

Bert Blyleven earned his 150th career pitching victory and Tim Foli drove in three runs to give the Pirates their win.

Elsewhere in the National League, Chris Chambliss drove in five runs with a three-run homer and two singles and Dale Murphy scored three times to give Atlanta a 6-3 decision over St. Louis.

Canadian Terry Puhl drew a bases-loaded walk to force in one run in the seventh inning and pinch-runner Jeff Leonard scored on a wild pitch to give Houston a 2-1 win over Chicago.

And in the American League, Terry Crowley's two-run single capped a three-run Baltimore first inning and Jim Palmer and Tim Stoddard combined for a six-hitter as the Orioles downed California Angels 5-2.

Craig Nettles drove in three runs with two doubles and a homer to help division-leading New York Yankees beat Seattle Mariners 6-3 and Minnesota Twins snapped a four-game losing streak by blanking Toronto Blue Jays 4-0.

Days off in jail for robber

A 30-year-old armed forces firefighter and part-time taxi driver was given a 90-day jail sentence in county court Monday and two years probation for a pair of armed robberies at two Saanich Safeway stores last August.

Ernest LeBlanc pleaded guilty to producing a knife and stealing a total of $793 from the Safeways at Town and Country Shopping Centre and University Heights Shopping Centre.

He was ordered, as a condition of probation, to repay $662 which was not recovered. In addition, he must report monthly to a probation officer, not possess any weapon and take family and financial counselling.

The jail sentence will be served on his off-days as a firefighter at the rate of nine days a month.

Judge Leslie Cashman said there was little to be gained and much to be lost by the usual jail term.

He noted that LeBlanc had no previous criminal record, worked steadily and was well spoken of by his superiors who said the events were out of character.

LeBlanc had debts of $9,000 and told police after his arrest he wouldn't have committed the armed robberies if he didn't need money.

Cashman also noted psychiatric evidence called by defence counsel David Lisson about his client's family, that he was a desperate man with financial problems who acted foolishing and impulsively in a period of distress.

Cashman said there was little planning in the armed robberies, that a usual jail term would cost LeBlanc his job, home and damage his wife and children, and the public did not require protection from him.

But because the two offences occurred only three days apart and because LeBlanc simply said he needed money, there must be some form of punishment because other people should not seek to resolve financial problems in the same way.

Before the judge

Two of three Victoria men charged in connection with the financially-troubled Donut King franchise waived their rights to a preliminary hearing Monday in Victoria provincial court in connection with a 46-count indictment.

George Sheldon Parkhurst and Terry Richard Strong were jointly charged with nine counts of conspiracy, and one count each of fraud, criminal breach of trust, and theft. Parkhurst was charged separately with three counts of conspiracy, 11 counts each of fraud and theft, and nine counts of criminal breach of trust. The amount allegedly involved in the counts is $201,000.

The pair had elected trial by judge without jury on Dec. 12 and a three-day-a-week preliminary hearing had been set to begin Monday and end July 14.

Parkhurst and Strong are also set for a preliminary hearing on a five-count information charging them with conspiracy to defraud the Canadian Bank of Commerce and fraud totalling an alleged $286,604.05.

Parkhurst and former Victoria alderman Robert St. George Ellis are jointly charged in a third information with three counts each of fraud, criminal breach of trust, and theft, and one count each of conspiracy to defraud the public and conspiracy to defraud an individual. Ellis is charged alone with 22 counts of fraud and 23 counts of of criminal breach of trust and theft. The total amount of money allegedly involved in all 79 counts is $442,800. The preliminary hearing into that information is still pending.

A 38-year-old man was declared mentally fit to stand trial on a charge of theft over $200.

Tom Gordon Harper, 2082 Haultain, was charged with the theft of $62,000 on March 18 from Transcoastal Enterprises Ltd. of Vancouver.

Defence lawyer Dean Wilson elected trial by judge and jury and a preliminary hearing date of Nov. 24 was set by Judge Harold Alder.

Harper was released on $2,000 surety bail.

Two 25-year-old men received jail terms after pleading guilty to drinking-driving offences.

Richard Brian Hives, 3868 Shelbourne, pleaded guilty to driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 May 17 at Squamish.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said Hives was convicted of the same offence May 15, 1974, in North Vancouver when he was fined $100, and of impaired driving Jan. 3, 1979, in Trail when he was fined $500.

Alder imposed a 14-day jail term.

Ronald Irwin Peterson, 2930 Qu'Appelle, pleaded guilty to impaired driving May 14 in Victoria.

It was Peterson's first drinking-driving offence, but Alder imposed a seven-day jail term after he learned Peterson had his parole revoked recently and was serving a term at William Head penitentiary.

Fined $400 each for drinking-driving offences were 23-year-old Linda Lou Desbiens, 630 Speed, and 31-year-old Karen Joan Cameron, 1035 Pendergast.

MLA to pursue privacy issue

The legislature's special committee on privileges should reconvene to consider recommending that Ottawa alter the privacy provisions of the Criminal Code, says Stu Leggatt (NDP—Coquitlam Moody).

The committee's report, tabled in the legislature June 6, should have included recommendations to deal with constituent's concerns that telephone conversations with their members might be tapped, said Leggatt, one of three NDP MLAs on the eight-member committee.

The committee said the RCMP wiretapping of Consumer Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen's office telephones during the course of a criminal investigation was a breach of privilege and a contempt of the house.

"It seems to me the committee may have overlooked something there and I am the first one to take my share of the blame in the preparation of the report," Leggatt said. "I will raise it with the chairman because it was not a deliberate attempt not to deal with the question."

Committee chairman Brian Smith said the matter was discussed during the committee's deliberations.

When the report is debated in the legislature, said Smith, Leggatt will have an opportunity to put forward a resolution along the lines the opposition MLA had suggested.

Sidney man admits blue collar killing

A 29-year-old Sidney man admitted in a statement to Saanich police that he stabbed a 31-year-old woman in her home, a B.C. Supreme Court jury was told Monday.

Denis Barry McFadden gave the statement to Sgt. James Arnold and Const. John Archer March 18. He is accused of first-degree murder in the death March 17 of Marion Barbara MacKay at her home on Old West Saanich Road.

After the statement was admitted as evidence and Arnold and Archer gave their testimony, the prosecution closed its case. The trial, presided over by Mr. Justice Gordon MacKinnon, was to continue today.

McFadden told police he was at the woman's house about 6 p.m. to take measurements of a broken window pane. He said he had been there 10 days earlier to repair a hot water tank and fell against the pane.

On the second visit, he said he was in her bedroom taking measurements and she was also in the room.

Then what happened, asked police.

"I don't know what the hell happened."

Did you have a quarrel with her?

"Yeah."

Did you have a physical fight?

"No."

How did you come to stab her?

"I know there was a lot of raised voices. She began to shout at me. I was standing up, the curtains were open. I give her a shove. I was standing up on top of that dressing table. And she pushed me. She got hold of my two legs and I went back against that window. Then I was on the ground. And she was shouting. She was screaming. I think her back was to the window at that time and she started screaming at me. And somewhere round about then I stabbed her."

McFadden said he didn't know how many times he stabbed MacKay.

"It's like a bad dream. I don't know how I came to take a knife to her. I just don't know what the hell happened."

Afterwards, he said he ran from the house and drove home. He remembered that some of his tools and the knife were still at the house "so I began to panic. I went back the house on the Old West Saanich Road. I got all my tools and what have you, the knife and so forth."

He said when he returned, she was dead. When he first left the house, he said he didn't know whether she was dead or not.

"So I wrapped her up in a blanket and put her in the back of the car," he said.

"Then I went home and went into the house. She was still in the back of the car. So I took the tarpaulin off the boat. This was about 1 o'clock. I wrapped her up in the tarpaulin and put her in the back of the boat.

"I sat up most of the night until 3 o'clock or so. Then I got back into the car and drove back to the Old West Saanich Road. Then I saw all you fellows at that time. All the police were there. So then I drove home."

McFadden said he threw the knife, about eight to 10 inches long, into the ocean.

He said he didn't know where he was going to get rid of the body.

Were you going to dump her in the ocean, asked police.

"I couldn't, there is no hitch on the car. Once I knew you were coming I just sat tight."

Archer and Arnold also testified about a second interview March 31 in Wilkinson Road jail.

At that time, he was shown a carving knife, found by a citizen on a beach and admitted by the defence to be McFadden's, and he replied "ah-huh" and nodded affirmatively when asked if that was the knife he used to kill MacKay.

McFadden also said he had been talking to his lawyer and said "why are you guys going for premeditation. I told you guys that morning what happened. Don't try to make something that isn't there."

An earlier witness, James Stymeist, manager last spring for the Blue Army home maintenance referral agency, said McFadden joined the agency last November and did about five jobs a week between January and March.

He identified a dispatch slip showing a call was referred to McFadden to fix a leaking pipe at the MacKay residence on Old West Saanich Road. The call was received March 7.

Stymeist also said it was the agency's policy that tradesmen restrict themselves to their own craft and that a plumber shouldn't fix a window but have the matter re-dispatched to the office.

Under cross-examination, he said from records he is not aware of anything to prove McFadden went to the house and that any work was completed.

Police board to send two planning delegates

Saanich Police Board Monday approved spending $2,000 to sent two delegates to a police building planning and design workshop in Las Vegas in August.

The board decided to send the architect who is chosen to design the new multi-million dollar police building and a police department representative.

The workshop Aug. 25-29 includes topics like planning principles for modern police buildings, design considerations, budgeting for new buildings and future models for law enforcement structures.

A Calgary symposium on policing this Friday will be attended by a board member and senior police officer, the board decided.

Cost of the one-day symposium, sponsored by the Calgary Police Commission, is $300 for each delegate.

Heritage house a 'gutted shell'

On Wednesday last week the owner got his building permit for interior alterations.

On Thursday the heritage house in Fernwood was a gutted shell.

Stuart Stark, president of the Hallmark Society, raised the alarm about the house at 1809 Fernwood Road, fearing that the valuable architectural details on the dwelling built in 1888 would be damaged beyond repair.

While they wondered how someone could so quickly strip the insides of a two-storey house, most members of the heritage advisory committee were reassured Monday that the owner is going to put everything back together again on the outside.

Ald. Bob Wright said he visited the house at noon. The owner told him he was converting it to apartments and would return the exterior to the original condition. There would be new aluminum windows but with the original wood moldings.

Over the objections of members Stark and John Keay, the heritage committee voted 3-2 against heritage designation of the house, which would by law prohibit demolition or exterior alteration. It is on the city's supplementary list of heritage houses.

Designation would also allow the owner to apply for a three-year exemption from city property taxes as long as he spends the money on exterior restoration work.

About 80 homeowners now get the tax break, with another 300 heritage houses on the city's supplementary lists.

Wright said there will be more conversions like this one because of the city's zero apartment vacancy rate.

They are going to be profitable regardless of heritage designation and if the house is going to be preserved anyway, the landlord shouldn't get the tax break.

"He doesn't need that," said the alderman.

The city has to consider the cost of the exemption. Wright said there are numerous older homes in Rockland on the heritage supplementary list which are eligible for conversion to apartments under the pre-1931 rule.

Some of them now pay several thousand dollars a year in taxes and if all of them applied for heritage designation, the total cost to Victoria taxpayers would be substantial, Wright said.

Politically it wouldn't be acceptable to council to exempt so many homes in this posh area of Victoria.

The committee also decided it would have to fine-tune the procedures by which members are notified of proposed alterations to heritage houses. The changes to 1809 Fernwood went through without reference to the heritage committee.

Earlier this year, they asked that all applications for building permits regarding the 400-odd houses on the three heritage lists e forwarded to the committee, but this was rejected by city hall after planning department staff complained of the delays and paperwork it would create.

"If it is drastic enough to look like they're ruining a listed building — say a Rattenbury building in Rockland — then someone will have the common ense to say we should notify someone," said Peter Crisp, assisstant city planner.

Tourist industry boom predicted

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian tourism industry is in for a boom year such as it has never seen before, says Ted Tilden, new chairman of the 500-member Tourism Industry Association of Canada.

"With coffee costing $3 a cup at the Zurich airport, a drink of Scotch $6 to $8 in Frankfurt or Stockholm, and a steak dinner $100 in Tokyo," Canadians will not be travelling as much outside their own country, Tilden told the annual meeting of the local visitors and convention services bureau.

"Our country is a bargain for travellers and, by present indications, the rest of the world is going to take advantage of the bargain."

Former MLA guilty of rape

HALIFAX (CP) — G. H. (Paddy) Fitzgerald, a former speaker of the Nova Scotia legislature, was sentenced today to five years in penitentiary after he was found guilty on a charge of raping a client.

Fitzgerald, a prominent defence lawyer both before and after his term as a Progressive Conservative member of the legislature, was convicted of the charge following a one-week trial last month.

He was arrested in March, 1979, after a client told police she had been attacked in Fitzgerald's Halifax law office.

Fitzgerald's lawyer, Brian Smith, said the conviction has already been appealed.

County court judge Robert Anderson, in handing down sentence, said he had to consider that the offence involved a solicitor-client relationship.

Broadcasting group eyes CBC building

The Victoria group seeking to take over the unused CBC building at Blanshard and Kings is holding an organizational meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Unitarian Church hall, 106 Superior St.

CFRE Public Broadcasting Society president Kim Martin said present members and all new parties interested in actively supporting public non-commercial television for the area are invited.

"We need a broad base of public support — and this meeting is being called to organize the membership and discuss the possible means by which public broadcasting may be realized in Victoria."

Crash victim identified

RCMP have identified a 21-year-old man killed in a two-vehicle crash south of Duncan early Sunday as Richard Eric Laursen, of Duncan.

Police said Laursen was the driver of a car that collided head on with a pickup truck driven by John Poivesan, 44, of Port Coquitlam.

Clifford South, 21, a passenger in the car, is in fair condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital today.

Poivesan and two passengers in his vehicle were not seriously hurt.

Shopping hour poll needless, Oak Bay rules

Oak Bay council agreed Monday night that provisions for public referendums in the provincial government's Bill 8 on holiday shopping hours should be deleted.

Council agreed with the Union of B.C. Municipalities that elected officials should have the power to make decisions on behalf of citizens on local government matters as they do on more far-reaching decisions on such as property tax levels.

If the public objects to what a council does, said the UBCM, the answer is at the ballot box in the election of council members.

The UBCM also said the referendum provision is unnecessarily complex and convoluted.

In other business, council agreed with a committee recommendation that staff attempt to obtain an affidavit restricting development of 383 King George Terrace to single-family use.

Building inspector J.H. Elsdon said he has an application to build a new house on the waterfront lot.

"While it complies with the zoning bylaw it is clearly intended to be occupied as two dwelling units because the plans show two dining rooms, two living rooms, two kitchens and so on," he said.

A letter from the law firm of Wilson, Bauman said, however, that Oak Bay doesn't have the authority to regulate the number of rooms or their use and so long as the residence is used as a single-family dwelling it must be permitted and a permit cannot be withheld because it contains two dining rooms, two living rooms, two kitchens and so on.

"If, however, the building is used for a two-family dwelling, then of course that use, if it contravenes your bylaw, can be prosecuted or an injunction applied for to restrain such use," the firm said.

Council decided to reiterate to Camosun College and Saanich council its policy on parking at the post-secondary institute after receiving a letter from Saanich deputy municipal clerk T.R. Kirk.

He said Saanich council has decided that any additional parking for the college not have access on either Argyle or Ernest, which are in Saanich, but on Foul Bay Road, in Oak Bay.

Mayor Doug Watts said Saanich was saying it won't help in any future parking. Oak Bay had agreed to an extra 160 parking spaces with access to Foul Bay Road but that would be it.

23% answer questionnaire

The public questionnaire preparatory to Oak Bay's official community plan has drawn a 23 per cent response.

Municipal administrator Jim Craven told council Monday night that 7,470 questionnaires were sent out and 1,767 have been returned.

Gas-leak well not a hazard

VANCOUVER (CP) — An oil well, closed because of a sulphide gas leak that forced evacuation of a native Indian village, should be allowed to reopen, an expert witness brought from Alberta said Monday in B.C. Supreme Court.

Rodney Edgecombe, assistant manager of environmental protection division of the Alberta Conservation Board, told Justice Harry McKay that if the well were in Alberta, it would be permited to resume operations if promised safety measures were carried out.

Edgecombe was testifying at a hearing in Vancouver where Kildonan Oil Ltd. seeks to have an injunction lifted. The injunction stops it from going back into production in its oil field near Fort St. John in northeastern B.C.

Charges follow shots

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 52-year-old man is facing three firearms charges as a result of a two-hour confrontation Monday with police during which a number of shots were fired from a rifle.

Harry Ernest Wharton is charged with unlawful possession of a firearm, unlawfully pointing a firearm and unlawfully discharging a firearm.

Prostitution controls

VANCOUVER (CP) — While the federal government appears ready to tighten sections of the Criminal Code dealing with prostitution, it is likely they will stop short of measures sought by Canadian police chiefs, Mayor Jack Volrich said Monday.

Volrich said he was optimistic that steps to control prostitution would be taken soon in response to repeated calls from police departments and municipalities.

Bomb appeal rejected

VANCOUVER (CP) — An application for a new trial for Jim Lewis, convicted in 1976 of the 1972 kettle bomb killings of a young East Indian couple in New Westminster, has been turned down by federal Justice Minister Jean Chretien.

"There was no demonstrable error or miscarriage of justice," in the trial and therefore there were no grounds for a new one, Chretien says in a letter to Lewis's lawyer John Laxton

Last hope Lewis and his family cling to is a pardon granted on the Royal Perogative of Mercy, a plea seldom granted.

Illegal strike banned

VANCOUVER (CP) — Four chemical preparation operators at Weyerhaeuser Canada's Kamloops pulp mill were ordered Monday by the B.C. Labor Relations Board to end an illegal strike.

The four employees, members of the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada, had refused to operate a new chemical process installed at the pulp mill a week ago unless their wage was raised.

UBC librarians get raise

VANCOUVER (CP) — Clerical and library employees at the University of B.C. have voted 705-to-214 to accept a two-year collective agreement reached after a four-week selective strike on campus.

The contract gives the 1,400 members of the Association of University and College Employees a 10-per-cent wage increase and a $100 lump sum payment in the first year, and a 9.5-per-cent increase in the second.

Elton John, Bob Marley, Shirley Bassey and the Babies all having been snatching up the hand-printed duds of Toronto's Angie Abbot. Abbot, founder of the funky second-hand clothes store Flying Down to Rio, just opened her new first-hand boutique so the public can buy what the stars wear. The new Toronto venture is called Algicyruss.

Beauty salon owner Robert Navone of Margate, N.J., has the perfect cure for nail-biters — fingernails too expensive to chew. Navone, who operates the Salon du Jour, has sold almost 400 14-karat gold fingernail overlays in the last three years at $60 each. He buys his "jet set" nails a dozen at a time from a New York jewelry craftsman who makes them by pouring molten gold into rubber molds.

Fashion model Johnathan Savdra has left Toronto to take a bite of the Big Apple. His prospects are juicy. The 25-year-old has landed a one-year contract with Zoli, New York's top male model agency, which could earn him $750 to $1,000 a day. Savdra is featured on the latest Big Steel posters.

Travelling from Reading, Pa., to Kenosha, Wis., is not particularly noteworthy — unless you're walking most of the way wearing a tunic and a coat of mail. Tom Crain, alias Sir Erane Valdier, planned on spending the weekend in Akron before resuming a 1,100-kilometre journey that will take him to King Richard's Medieval Festival in Kenosha, where he will become an honorary knight. "I've always wanted to be a knight," said Crain, a 20-year-old student at Albright College in Reading. "This really means something to me. I'm going to consider myself nobility after this quest." Crain, wearing 20 pounds of medieval attire, also carries a 30-pound pack sack. "My feet feel like mashed potatoes," he said.

Feminism scored a dubious victory on Toronto's Yonge Street with a Father's Day-inspired flashing. Brick Shirt House owner Allen Gooch switched the usual mannequins with men as part of a Father's Day promotion. Intrigued passers-by argued whether the two actors, Brian Sexsmith and Richard Jennings, were alive or just good imitations. At one point, Richard raised his eyebrow to the delight of one young woman who was peering intently through the glass. She returned the gesture by undoing her blouse and flashing her feminine charms.

Dear Abby:

Was I ever glad to see that letter in your column about the girl who would never say yes or no — she always said, "I don't care."

I had a very good friend who did the same thing. No matter what I asked her, she'd say, "I don't care." It used to just drive me up a wall.

Once I asked her if she wanted a cup of coffee, and she gave me the same old, wishy-washy "I don't care," so I said, "Well, I don't care either. Do you want a cup of coffee, or don't you?"

It was as though a light had turned on in her head. She said, very positively, "Yes, I would like a cup." I gave her a big hug and congratulated her.

Then she said she realized how stupid she must have sounded all those years saying "I don't care." She admitted that she was just shy and afraid she'd come across as too bold or eager.

Abby, print this for all those people who need to know that it's important to be positive and assertive. I have another friend who, when I ask how he is, always says, "All right — I guess." Next time he "guesses" how he is, I'm going to tell him to find out for sure and let me know.

Debbie

Dear Debbie:

Much to my surprise, many readers wrote to inform me that in certain parts of the country, "I don't care" means "Yes."

Dear Abby:

I am at the end of my rope! I have a 7-year-old daughter who talks constantly! She's a good student, but at least two or three times a week I get a call from her teacher telling me that my child talked all day and disrupted the class.

If the teacher isn't calling, she's writing me notes. Abby, I hate to punish my daughter for talking because I truly believe she can't help herself. This child talks from the minute she opens her eyes in the morning until she closes them at night. What's a mother to do?

Motormouth's Mom

Dear Mom:

Your daughter could be a compulsive talker. Have her evaluated by a child psychiatrist or psychologist. If she's compulsive, she can be helped by therapy. Compulsive behavior of any kind should not be ignored.

Dear Abby:

Shame on you for using that old joke about the nun who had a sex change operation. It represents a shocking depature from your use of original material. I thought you had more resistance.

Show and tell

Not too many years back it was common to hear people complain they had to go to Vancouver if they wanted quality, contemporary fashion. Not so today.

Victoria ladies-wear outlets — boutiques to department stores — are bringing in specialty and exclusive lines for the tastes and needs of Victorians.

Particularly active this year have been the growing ranks of Vancouver designers and manufacturers who have been brought here for fashion shows or consultation by city merchants who themselves have been travelling to fashion sources wherever to keep up with sophistication in the local market.

Overall interest has been shown in the area of Canadian design and manufacture and this week an example takes place in Trounce Alley with a visit by designer Sybil Casey.

Casey has worked as a fashion designer on "The Avenue" — Spadina Avenue in Toronto — for some three years. Prior to that she operated a series of boutiques there.

"I design for the businesswoman who is quite busy, travels a lot and has an active social life," she said in a telephone interview from Vancouver where she is preparing a showing of her fall line for this Friday. She has just finished presenting the the fall series in Toronto and because Victoria's Shanelle boutique stocks her line, she has agreed to follow Vancouver's show with a two hour presentation Saturday at Shanelle.

Casey's line consists of better quality dresses, all imported fabrics such as pure wool crepe — and with the accent on finishing.

"My motto is to have a European-quality dress made here in Canada," she says. "So the object is to spend money on finishing rather than on import duties and tax."

Casey says her wardrobes are to be kept three or four years at least and not discarded annually.

"These clothes are meant to work. They are not fidgety clothes. You don't have to be pulling and tugging at yourself — they fit very well."

Casey, married with two teenage daughters, says the line is sold as couture because each one is separately cut.

"My dresses are feminine and wearable and can be worn by any age. They would look just as right on my daughters as they would on me."

Casey's fashions were subject of a major fashion spread in the April issue of Homemaker magazine.

SYBIL CASEY hasn't always been in design. She has worked as both model and actress — and even for a short time as a race car driver. Saturday's Casey presentation at Shanelle in Trounce Alley starts at 4 p.m., with two models demonstrating the fall line; photographed by Victoria fashion photographer Seyd Safavi who also took this study of model Tanys who is wearing a Casey creation from her spring collection.

Turn up volume on hair

By BETTIJANE LEVINE
Los Angeles Times

The word in hair this year is volume. Not long or short or straight or curly. Any of those will do, as long as it has volume. In hair-stylist's lingo, volume means hair that can lie flat on command, or puff up at a moment's notice.

Those who specialize in hair say that volume isn't born, it's cut. Or achieved by permanent wave. And even the straggliest head of hair can have it.

Geri Cusenza, of Cassandre 2000, says she gets volume by having her customers sit with their heads hanging down, while she cuts from that position. She calls it a "gravitational cut" and claims that "when the woman sits rightside up again, her hair has twice as much volume as it had before."

For short styles, Cusenza has devised a permanent wave that's applied to the hair only near the roots. "This gives volume in much the same way teasing used to do," Cusenza says, "but it's softer, more natural, less harmful than teasing."

Cusenza styled the hair of a model to look as if she has a short cut with fullness at the crown. But she doesn't. What she really has is chin-length hair, but in two versatile, shaggy layers.

Jose Eber is the man who gave Farrah Fawcett her new long-hair style. It's similar to the "wild mane" look, one that is now sweeping high-fashion circles in Los Angeles, Paris and New York. To carry it off, you need not only the right hair, but the right face as well. It's an option — and the 1980s promises to be a decade full of them, in hair as well as makeup.

The models pictured, for example, have 1980 eyes The lids are very light, touched with ultraviolet shadow. The browbones are shadowed with true pink blusher — the same shade of blusher used on their cheeks. It's carried from the browbone out to the temple, and then down along the cheekbones.

"Women might put away their earthy terra-cotta blushers for awhile, and try using pastel pinks at eyes and cheeks, with the same tone of pink in their lipstick," says Joanne Fradkin of Pigments, who currently creates this look for models and movie stars at two salons in Los Angeles.

Barbara Boyd, of the Elizabeth Arden salon in Beverly Hills, agrees that pink is a coming color. "Eye makeup now is not stopping at the eye," she says. "It is extended onto the cheeks and complemented by the lip color. We use pale pink and pale lavender, and we brighten the face even further by adding very delicate false lashes at the outer corners of the eyes."

Most makeup experts agree that eye liner is coming back, but not in the old top-heavy Cleopatra fashion. "We use eye liner delicately, and mostly in between the lashes," says Aida Grey, of the Beverly Hills salon that bears her name. "Sometimes a very fine line is drawn just at the base of the upper lashes. Often we extend it a bit beyond the outer corner of the eye."

HAIR
. . . length no worry

Eye liner is also dotted in between the lower lashes or on the shelf just above the lower lashes. Matching shadow is often smudged, with a small wand, just below the lashes. Beneath that, a touch of pink blusher further brightens up the face. The look is an adaptation of the bizarre style begun by the British punkers. But it's been so diluted and refined that it's now suitable for an evening at the opera.

Positive ions can make you negative

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Would you believe that when there is a strong off-shore wind I get dizzy and irritable? Then comes the headache. This lasts until the wind subsides.

Mrs. N.D.

Dear Mrs. D.:

Yes, I do believe it. For many years, doctors all over the world have made the interesting observation that changes in barometric pressure and humidity can be responsible for a great many symptoms. Headaches, migraine attacks and even personality changes have been attributed to severe rainstorms, lightning and thunderstorms.

Very recently, Dr. Seymour Diamond, director of the Diamond Headache Clinic in Chicago, said, "Research studies have noted that irritability and headaches are often caused by hot winds. Among those are the Santa Ana of southern California, Arizona desert winds, the Sirocco of the Mediterranean, the Maltese Xlokk, the Argentine Zonda, the Foehn of Switzerland, southern Germany and Austria, the Chamsin of the Middle East, and the north winds of Melbourne, Australia."

There have been some scientific studies that suggest that the air becomes ionized, which may be responsible for physiological changes that produce symptoms such as you describe.

Ask any Frenchman what happens to him when there is a strong Mistral wind and you will find immediate corroboration.

Dear Doctor:

Our 10-year-old daughter has had many attacks of cystitis. When the attack is over she is in perfect health again. Our only concern is the possibility that after a while her kidneys will be infected, and she will be an invalid.

Mrs. M.Z.

Dear Mrs. Z.:

Cystitis is an inflammation, infection or irritation of the lining of the urinary bladder. It commonly occurs in young girls, especially those who are not properly trained in hygiene after bowel movements.

Germs can be introduced into the bladder by inadequate cleanliness or by improper cleansing. There may also be some anatomical reason for a child to develop frequent bouts of cystitis. There are many tests, including cystoscopy and urine studies, which can find intrinsic disease of the bladder, if it exists.

Cystitis responds rapidly to the antibiotics and sulfa drugs. Active treatment of cystitis almost always prevents the extension of the infection to the kidney.

With diligent care, there is hardly any reason for your concern.

youth clinic

Dear Mr. Vichert:

I am 15 years of age and very confused. I was going out with one guy for quite a while and ow we have broken up. Recently I found out he is dealing and using acid. I tried talking to him to let him know someone cares. I don't think it did any good. I know how harmful these drugs are to your health, and how they affect your mind.

Answer: I admire your desire to want to help your ex-boyfriend. It is important for people to know someone is concerned and cares about them. Though your ex-boyfriend may not respond to your worry about his activities at the moment, your interest may be remembered and be helpful to him at some future time. At that time, the memory of your interest may make it easier for him to come to talk with you.

It is a difficult lesson to learn that many people will refuse help when it is offered. Most people have to make up their own mind that they need help before they can accept it. Letting your ex-boyfriend know of your concer may be all you can do right now. Your ability to care for others is a fine quality which I hope you will always have.

Dear Dr. Levine:

I am an 18-year-old male, with a problem that I believe began three years ago when my father passed away. Since then, I have been unable to accept any changes in my life, no matter how small.

I left home to go to college in another city. This experience was depressing, I felt lonely. I have just recently changed rooms in the same building, and I found this to be an extremely depressing and lonely experience.

I figured that my life should end, all my bad points kept coming to my mind. Now that I look back, I'm glad that I didn't commit suicide; but what about next time? Is each of these changes (no matter how small) a reminder of how my life was changed three years ago?

Answer: I really can't answer the question as to whether your inability to tolerate even minimal changes in your life is due entirely to your father's death three years ago. If this problem really began subsequent to his death, it is obviously related; but it may well be intertwined with other personality characteristics.

Life is full of highs and lows, unexpected crises. Adaptability to change is, to a great extent, a learned behavioral characteristic which we pick up from our families and those close to us from a very early age.

The important point is that a diminution in flexibility can be overcome by learning or, in some cases, via psychotherapy.

Your difficulty with change is understandably very distressing. Your psychological state may be a reflection of your not having fully "worked through," not having adequately grieved and mourned after the death of your father. You have not as yet been able to accept that major loss.

I think that at age 18, with these symptoms having lasted for three years and with suicide at least having been contemplated, you would do well to consult a psychotherapist.

Dear Dr. Powell:

I wish to ask some questions about tampons. Are they dangerous in any way? Can anyone use them? Do you have to break the hymen before using them? If so, does it hurt? Can you do it by yourself? Also, does the hymen have to be broken before sex can take place?

Answer: Tampons are not dangerous to use and have been a tremendous boon to women in providing protection during menstrual periods. Most women can use them without any difficulty. I am not aware of problems associated with their use, and they are more convenient than pads for active women.

Tampons are small in diameter and should not be painful to insert the first time. The hymen is a thin rim of membrane and, in most women, stretches easily. Occasionally, the hymen is thicker and may have to be stretched more gradually.

The best way to find out is to go to your doctor to be examined.

Tampons are much smaller than a penis, so the use of tampons does not stretch the entrance to the vagina as much as sexual intercourse.

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel including Marion Powell, physician; Graham Cotter, clergyman; Dr. Saul Levine, psychiatrist, and social worker Bruce Vichert.

Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria V8W 2N4. Readers wishing to talk with someone about their problems can call NEED at 386-6233.

Original touches

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Ethel Kennedy, mother of the bride, said Saturday's ceremony was "traditional with a few original touches."

One touch was in the marriage vows exchanged by Courtney Kennedy, daughter of the late Sen. Robert Kennedy, and Jeff Ruhe. "Oh God, our Father in heaven," the couple said, "we now kneel before you very happy, but somewhat nervous."

The wedding at Holy Trinity Church, where Courtney's uncle, President John F. Kennedy, worshipped regularly, lasted a little more than an hour.

Among the 13 bridesmaids was Caroline Kennedy, daughter of the late president and cousin of the bride. Caroline's mother, Jacqueline Onassis, was among those who attended.

The bride, who was escorted down by the aisle by Sen. Edward Kennedy, wore an Oscar de la Renta gown of silk, lace and chiffon. The service featured music ranging from Bob Dylan's Forever Young to Aaron Copeland's Appalachian Spring.

After it was over, the couple drove a red 1910 Stanley touring car to a reception at Hickory Hill, the Robert Kennedy homestead in McLean, Va.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Wednesday, June 18, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Some people, close to you, make promises they cannot keep. Know it and maintain "backup" plans. Aura of romance, glamour and intrigue prevails. If you insist on being gullible, blame only yourself for consequences. Work procedures, duties should be defined.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Imprint style, create, make a commitment — your position, recently precarious, will be strengthen. Know it, take a chance on your own capabilities. Bring priorities into focus. Member of opposite sex plays major role.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You learn facts concerning safety, security, home, domestic situation, where you stand with older, powerful person who can close transaction or leave it "hanging." Aries, Libra persons figure prominently.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What seems confused, in disarray, will fall into a regular, reliable pattern. Know it, keep the faith — check various possibilities, be versatile, make inquiries, respond to call from brother, sister or other.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emphasis on payments, collections, decisions which affect basic security. Share knowledge with one who taught and aided you in past. You get what you want — but, first, you must regain sense of what you actually desire.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent new starts, independence, fresh hope, valid reasons for optimism based on recent contacts, changes and promises. Gemini, Sagittarius and another Virgo figure prominently. Cycle high — judgment, hunches hit target — with a resounding, "Bang!"

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Restrictions removed if you are aware of details, keys, past obligations, policies. Aquarius, Taurus, Leo natives figure prominently. Get view from behind scenes, obtain "inside story." Be aware of trends, subtle nuances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent on dividends, successful career-business enterprise, significant changes, ability to communicate with "special" member of opposite sex. Romance, hopes and wishes dominate personal scenario. Study written material.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You get what you want — key is to define aspirations, to delineate ambitions. Emphasis on home base, domestic situation, making intelligent concessions to family member.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Good lunar aspect coincides now with long-range plans, spiritual "revelations," publishing, special communications, good news connected with financial status of one close to you. Pisces, Virgo natives play key roles.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emphasis on "hidden material," ability to dig beneath surface indications, better understanding of leases, small print in insurance policies, financial status of partner or mate. Capricorn, Cancer natives figure prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent on contractual obligations, finishing a project, enlarging horizons, letting go of supposed security blanket, taking cold plunge into future. Aries, Libra persons figure in scenario. Time is one your side. Know it and act accordingly.

IF JUNE 18 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY You are due for major domestic "transition." September will be month when family situation comes into focus and you can do something constructive about it. You are drawn to music, medicine and drama. People gravitate to you with their problems. You have knack for inspiring trust and aiding others in times of crises. In November, relationship is intensified, you have more responsibilities and greater opportunity for financial gain. Aries, Libra persons play important roles in your life. You are capable of graphically illustrating meanings and of perceiving potential in others and in yourself.

Worcester designs still used

the collectors

By KEN RICHARDSON

Back in the middle of the 18th century, in the English town of Worcester, four local worthies formed a syndicate to establish what has become known as one of the world's most famous potteries.

They acquired an invention of one, Benjamin Lund of Bristol, who — using a deposit of soaprock or steatite he found in Cornwall — produced a soft paste, essentially English china.

Unlike the porcelain of ancient China which, up to that time, had been cold and hard the new creation was not quite as fine and certainly warmer to the touch.

The early pictorial designs on Worcester, numbering 2,000 or so, were the work of Robert Hancock and did much to put the ware on the map.

Some of the designs, a range of superbly distictive colors, are still used.

They proved to be so popular that even today reproductions of them are created at the factory.

Ownership of the enterprise passed to Thomas Flight and Martin Barr in 1783, then partners Kerr and Binge in 1852; the latter launched the Worcester Royal Porcelain Factory and as such it is known to this day.

Currently, the company produces the Dorothy Doughty American and English Birds, the charming animal models of Doris Lindner, Ronald van Ruyckevelt's game birds and the Victoria female figurines by Ruth van Ruyckevelt — among many celebrated artistic creations.

I have found the occasional rare specimen at flea markets but the search would be less arduous if confined to pottery collector-dealers. Shows, too, can prove rewarding but prices tend to be a little higher.

Worcester marks began with a crescent, then crossed swords and, later, Chinese seal marks. The '51' mark used subsequent to 1852 refers only to the establishment of the factory in 1751. A crown was added in 1862.

Values range from $9 to $550. An 1876 vase in the shape of a shell is worth abut $90; a Gold Owl figurine, about $145; a Bowl with a bird decor, about $48; a cream Teapot with March Flowers, about $42.

HAND CROCHETE dolls are two of over 400 different types on display July 4 and 5 at 1 p.m. to 9 p.m. and 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. respectively in the Georgian Room of the Empress Hotel. The show and sale, featuring both antique and modern dolls from all over the world, is being staged to benefit Norfolk House School equipment fund.

Frisbee with hooks

TORONTO (CP) — Vaughan O'Keefe plays Frisbee— but he catched the disc with two hooks instead of hands and runs on a leg made of iron tubes and padding.

Almost two years have passed since a fall from an Ontario Hydro tower cost O'Keefe, 15, parts of both arms and loss of his right leg.

O'Keefe is considering becoming a commercial artist.

By RENA PAUL

Dear Rena:

Try putting yourself in my place. My husband of 9 years demands that I look my best at all times (even grocery shopping and gardening!) but if I so much as suggest a haircut for him, or notice a well-groomed man, there's the dickens to pay. He resists all but the most basic personal toiletries and accessories. What's this one-sided "You look your best for me, but don't expect me to follow suit" business? How would you handle it?

Frustrated

Dear Frustrated:

You might inundate your coffee table and magazine racks with glossy and appealing male fashion periodicals. Sooner or later, the chap who only buys deodorant and toothpaste will expose himself to the great new wave of male fastidiousness. Such strong resistance will not vanish overnight but cracks are bound to appear with conditioning and subtle engineering. Watch his reaction to your praise over the smallest detail, pick up an unusually pretty tie and let it suddenly "appear" on his tie rack. Present him with one of the distinctive male fragrances for men, and by all means, continue to admire well-turned-out gentlemen's looks. Be patient and consistent with suggestions, whether verbal or "engineered".

Dear Rena:

I recently bought a new swimsuit which exposes a lot of upper leg. I definitely need a depilatory that is effectie but gentle. Most popular brands cause a skin reaction in the form of little red eruptions, and shaving does the same thing. Can you recommend a good product I can use at home, or must I visit a professional salon?

F.L.

Dear F.L.

Let me stress that a do-it-yourself "Bikini waxing" is tricky business. There is a special technique involved in the stretching of the skin and removal of the wax. The hair must be a certain precise length, and the are must be prepowdered . . . all in all, I'd call a good salon and ask about "the GIGI Honey Wax" procedure an excellent specialty of some professionals. You might also contact dermatologist.

Dear Rena:

You can say I'm "picky" but here goes. Why do women insist on wearing open sandals without doing anything to make their feet more attractive? Whatever happened to the woman who spent time on her toenails before thrusting them at the world in a pair of sandals?

"Picky" Jones

Dear "Picky":

Thank goodness you notice and speak up! You merely underline the fact that there are no shortcuts in foot care, especially when they are bared and on display.

Cairo eyes Libya flank

CAIRO (UPI) — Egypt has declared a military emergency and says its armed forces will be in charge of its 1,200-kilometre border with Libya because of threats by Libyan strongman Moammar Khadafy.

The emergency was expected to take effect Wednesday after full parliamentary approval.

"On June 11," Hassan said, "Col. Khadafy revived his threats to Egypt's security and exposed his premeditated intentions when he announced in a radio broadcast that Libya will direct its weapons against Egyptian troops deployed in the western zone. Col. Khadafy made it clear he is seeking to threaten Egypt's peace and security."

Egypt and Libya have been locked in a political feud over Arab unity and Middle East peace for the past 7 years. Since fighting a bloody war in 1977, both sides are believed to have massed large numbers of troops and tanks along their mutual border.

Libya has denounced Egypt's peace treaty with Israel as treason and Egypt, in turn, accused the Soviet Union of using Libya as a springboard for its ambitions in Africa.

Martial law in force throughout Egypt since the 1967 Arab-Israeli war was lifted by Sadat only a month ago.

Scores of Libyan "saboteurs" and "infiltrators" accused of bombing government installations in Cairo, Alexandria and other cities have been arrested during the past few years.

Lt. Gen. Abdel Halim Abu Ghazala, chief of staff of the armed forces, said in a recent interview that Libya is building a giant line of fortifications along the frontier.

He said the Soviet-planned line is intended for a military offensive against Egypt.

Soviet troops in Afghanistan growing daily

Times News Services

LONDON — Two dozen aircraft of the Soviet Aeroflot airline — some bearing the inscription "official Olympic carrier" — are bringing troops and military equipment to the Afghan capital of Kabul daily, The Times reported today.

A report written by the newspaper's correspondent estimated there now are more than 110,000 Soviet soldiers in Afghanistan.

The 104th Soviet Parachute Division has arrived in Afghanistan and is based in Bagram, about 72 kilometres north of Kabul, the report said.

It added that the Soviet Union now has seven motorized divisions — two more than in February — deployed throughout the country.

The Times also said that 1,000 Soviet soldiers were in hospital in Kabul in May and that 200 of them had died from their wounds.

The report quoted a Kabul merchant as saying there were 10,000 men in the Afghan capital ready to fight Soviet troops if they could find weapons to arm themselves.

In related news, official figures released in Canberra today show that Australia, which pledged not to make up Soviet grain shortfalls caused by cancelled U.S. sales, this year increased the volume of wheat exports to Moscow 11 times.

In March alone, Australia sold 303,000 tonnes of wheat to the Soviet Union.

An Australian government spokesman said most of the contracts were signed before the Soviet invasion.

Litter-ally hen-pecked!

MILFORD, Del. (AP) — Mabel Savage's chicken has gone to the dogs. For the last four weeks, the unnamed hen has been roosting atop seven squirming mongrel puppies, leaving only when she is chased away.

"Something awful funny has been going on in there; it's just not natural," said Mrs. Savage, who has to chase the hen away two or three times a day so that Suzie, the puppies' real mother, can nurse her offspring.

"When the chicken leaves, the pups start crying and it just makes me feel awful. But I've got to do it. I can't let them starve to death."

it's easy and it's fun — just follow the instructions below to crack the safe and win something nice for summer

HOW TO ENTER

Complete the puzzle and fill in the "PASSWORD" on the entry form. Clip out the entry form and send it to us in an envelope with the puzzle number printed in the top left hand corner of the envelope. (As illustrated.)

Be sure to include your name, address and phone number on the entry form.

Enter as many times as you wish but make sure each entry is in a separate envelope.

Mail your entries to:
"Summerfunthing"
Post Office Box 1390
Victoria, B.C.
V8W 3C4

or drop your entries off at Victoria Press
2621 Douglas St.
Monday through Friday
8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

A new puzzle will appear each day, but the weekly winners will be selected from all entries submitted for the previous week's puzzles.

To be eligible, your entry must be received by 5:30 p.m. on the Thursday following the week the puzzle was published.

Enter daily, or as often as you wish, but be sure each entry is submitted in a separate envelope.

HOW TO PLAY

Locked inside the "SUMMERFUNTHING" safe are many valuable prizes. Some of those prizes could be yours if you find the correct PASSWORD that opens the combination lock. It's an exciting game that's fun and easy to enter. The instructions on the dial give you the position of the letters in the "SUMMERFUNTHING" PASSWORD. All you have to do is find the first letter to start. For instance, suppose you started at the letter E and the instructions read 2nd LETTER — FOUR COUNTER CLOCKWISE. Count four spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter E and you arrive at the letter A. The next instruction reads 3rd LETTER — EIGHT COUNTER CLOCKWISE, so count off eight spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter A and you arrive at the letter S. Finally the 4th letter. SIX CLOCKWISE means you count in a clockwise direction from the letter S and you arrive at the letter Y. In this example the PASSWORD is the word E-A-S-Y. To give you another clue and to add to the interest, each days password is scrambled and you will find it at the bottom of the illustration.

GAME RULES

1. Winners will be chosen by random drawing from all valid entries. All winners must answer a skill testing question.
2. Winners from the previous week will be published in the Saturday Times and Sunday Colonist.
3. It is not necessary for contestants to buy the Colonist or Times to enter the SUMMERFUNTHING contest. An exact drawing of the entry form printed in the Colonist or Times may be made on a plain piece of paper. Note: copies produced by any other process will not be accepted.
4. The SUMMERFUNTHING judges will have the final decision on any interpretation of Game rules.
5. As a condition of receiving prizes, recipients agree to allow publication of their names and pictures in the Colonist or Times for no additional consideration. Submission of an entry indicates acceptance of all rules. No prize substitutions.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Daily Colonist and Victoria Times on Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands. Employees of Victoria Press and their immediate families are not eligible to enter.
7. In fairness to all, the Colonist or Times cannot answer questions or respond to phone calls or letters regarding THE SUMMERFUNTHING CONTEST.
8. All winners will be determined by a random draw from all valid entries.

Tin Drum in Drumheller

EDMONTON (CP) — The Tin Drum, an award-winning West German movie banned in Ontario because of sex scenes involving children, was scheduled to be shown in Alberta without cuts.

The Alberta film censorship board has classified the movie "restricted adult," declining the follow the example of Ontario where the film will not be shown because the producers refused to made cuts requested by the censors.

The film won an Academy Award this year as best foreign picture.

Bow-and-arrow revolt gets serious

Times News Services

PORT VILA — Rebellious natives on the island of Espiritu Santo blocked airfield runways with oil drums and trucks today to keep New Hebrides government negotiatiors away. The government warned its effort at bargaining was the last before military intervention.

Three high-level government negotiators, accompanied by three planeloads of reporters, were forced to turn back from the island after the control tower radioed that the runway had been blocked.

The tower said the negotiators could not land because they did not have the permission of the Vemerana Republic, as rebel leader Jimmy Stevens has named his seecessionist island.

Stevens, leader of the bow-and-arrow rebellion by natives and French planters who are backed by wealthy American businessmen seeking a tax haven, had said in a radio message to Port Vila on Monday night he would allow the negotiators to land. No reason was given for his change of mind.

The New Hebrides government reversed an earlier decision Monday and offered to negotiate with both the rebels.

Rebels on the sister island of Tanna include members of a cargo cult who believe a U.S. GI named John Frum is the Messiah and will someday emerge from a volcano bringing them refrigerators, radios and other worldly goods. Stevens' group seized Espiritu Santo on May 28; the Tanna cultists made an unsuccesful attempt the same day and then seized the island last Wednesday.

It was not known whether a government negotiator was able to land in Tanna as scheduled.

Chief Minister Walter Lini was reportedly "anxious for further negotiations to be explored before military intervention is needed."

The political standoff between Lini and Stevens has escalated into a serious diplomatic tiff between Britain and France, who have jointly administered the island chain for 74 years. The archipelago is scheduled to become independent on July 30th.

Britain has had 200 Royal Marine commandos in Port Vila for two days. But the British have not said whether they would commit the troops on pro-French Espiritu Santo, despite pleas for action from Lini, whose government comes from the New Hebrides' majority English-speaking population.

Meanwhile, France has protested against the presence of the marines. Fifty-five French police were pulled out of Port Vila on Friday, less than 24 hours after they arrived, on grounds the situation had calmed. French sources have said if force was used on Espiritu Santo, they would be obligated to use French police to protect French nationals there.

France apparently has backed out of an agreement with Britain to end the uprisings.

Irritated British officials said they were "mystified" by all this after they thought the military moves and commitment to the granting of independence on July 30 had been agreed in repeated negotiations by British and French diplomats.

British Foreign Minister Lord Carrington has promised to arrange still another meeting between British and French diplomats after the Times of London declared Monday morning: "The New Hebrides affair is no longer trivial."

Septic abortion blamed on device

DENVER (AP) — A $6.8 million award to a woman who suffered a nearly fatal septic abortion after using the Dalkon Shield marketed by A. H. Robins Co. has been upheld.

In a decision handed down Monday, Denver District Court Judge Robert Fullerton upheld the award to Carie Palmer.

"Robins' marketing of the Dalkon Shield was characterized by a conscious decision . . . to market an inadequately tested, dangerous product by unethical and improper means, using false and misleading advertising," Fullerton said.

"The evidence showed that once the company was made specifically aware of the numerous dangerous side effects of the device, including the fact that the Dalkon Shield was causing septic abortions, it suppressed the information, made additional false claims, and then resorted to an effort to cover up the facts."

A septic abortion is a miscarriage associated with infection of the uterus.

Iran parliament won't talk hostages until fall: paper

Times News Services

TEHRAN — Iran's newly-elected parliament is unlikely to discuss the American hostage incident until mid-September and the issue may be eventually dealt with in a referendum, the Tehran newspaper Donyaye Iran reported today.

The newspaper, after interviewing a number of those elected to the new parliament, or Majlis, said the body will be occupied with routine business until mid-September.

The new parliament is dominated by the Islamic Republican party, many of whose members have called for the diplomatic captives to be put on trial.

The Americans were taken captive Nov. 4 when militants stormed the U.S. embassy in Tehran. The students have demanded the return of the deposed shah as the price for the hostages' release.

Iran has transferred all its gold stocks — 14 tons valued at $300 million — from Western countries back to Tehran, London's Financial Times said today.

"It is thought in London that Iran has taken these steps to protect itself against the possibility of a further freeze on overseas assets as part of Western action over the U.S. hostages," the newspaper said.

Most of the withdrawals were made in London.

Meanwhile, Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh has ruled out a return of the UN Commission on Iran, dashing hopes of the world body's securing the release of the hostages.

The inquiry commission that spent 17 days in Iran earlier this year will continue to withhold its report because of its failure to see the hostages, a UN spokesman said Monday.

In a further sign of the power struggle going on in Iran, the commander of the Islamic Revolutionary Guard, Abu Sharif, was reported to have resigned complaining of conflicting factions in the paramilitary force, the official Pars news agency reported late Monday.

Abu Sahrif, considered a supporter of President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, announced his resignation in a letter carried by the agency, but at last report the Bani-Sadr had not accepted it.

EEC reels in on fish pact

LUXEMBOURG (Reuter) — Britain, Denmark, Ireland and the Netherlands joined forces Monday to delay a planned EEC fishing agreement with Canada, British Fisheries Minister Peter Walker said.

Walker told reporters after a meeting of the nine European Economic Community fisheries ministers that proposed increases in access to the EEC market for Canadian frozen fish were unacceptable to Britain, although supported by West Germany.

The ministers directed the EEC's farm commissioner, Finn Gundelach of Denmark, to report back after further consultations with Canada.

Slayings by soldiers linked to Lule's return

KAMPALA (AP) — Men believed to be Ugandan soldiers shot 15 civilians to death in suburbs of the capital, police and another source said Monday.

The army urged people to stay calm following reports that soldiers had rounded up and killed two groups of civilians in separate incidents Sunday night.

Police in the Kampala suburb of Natete said men in army uniforms took five civilians from an outlying village to an open area, then killed them.

In another incident later that night, 10 civilians were killed near a community centre five kilometres from Natete, a worker at the centre said. Their bodies were found Monday beside a main road into Kampala.

Army officers addressing a crowd at Natete on Monday pleaded for calm and said the killings were not political but the result of private disputes between the soldiers and civilians.

Kampala has been plagued by armed robberies and assassinations under two administrations since dictator Idi Amin was overthrown in April, 1979. The violence eased after a military coup five weeks ago, but the capital remains under curfew.

The latest killings occurred two days before the return of exiled President Yusufu Lule, one of the two civilian leaders after Amin, and there were rumors the incidents were related to his return.

Kampala and its suburbs are a political stronghold for Lule, who may seek to regain power in elections expected later this year.

Oil speech sparks Tory fury

OTTAWA (CP) — Progressive Conservative MPs threw the Commons into an uproar Monday over weekend remarks by Energy Minister Marc Lalonde that Alberta rejected an interim energy deal with Ottawa on conditions identical to those proposed by their defeated government.

A red-faced Opposition Leader Joe Clark, visibly upset, bounded out of his seat near the end of a rowdy question period to pass Prime Minister Trudeau a transcript of Lalonde's comments during a television interview. The prime minister, grinning though somewhat startled, refused to accept the transcript and Clark returned to his seat.

The Conservatives were upset with the energy minister for what they said was a deliberate attempt to misrepresent the terms of the Liberal government's interim offer to Alberta, delivered last week.

They said Lalonde did not leave the impression he was offering only the same pricing package to Oct. 1 they had put forward. The MPs particulary objected to the following remark by Lalonde during the interview.

"I did put forward another offer which would have had an interim agreement until Oct. 1 of this year and which would have put into effect identical conditions to those contained in the Conservative budget of Dec. 11."

Conservative Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham) said Lalonde's comments were "clearly wrong" because only the pricing is the same. The Liberals did not offer any other measures, such as energy tax credits, a federal energy bank and other proposals in the Conservative budget proposal. He asked Trudeau to rebuff the energy minister.

But Trudeau replied that Lalonde's comments did refer to an interim pricing agreement that would have had the same effect as the Conservative proposal until Oct. 1.

Clark later challenged Trudeau about other Lalonde comments that the premiers of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia — the primary oil and gas producing provinces — had given firm assurances they wanted the energy talks kept separate from the process of constitutional reform.

Justice Minister Jean Chretien had conceded in response to Clark's question that the premiers had not delivered such firm assurances.

The Opposition leader later told reporters "that kind of misrepresentation is going to make it very difficult for agreement on either energy or constitutional matters. It's there, it's happened quite consistently and it should stop."

The controversy comes just 24 hours before Lalonde is to meet here with his Alberta counterpart Merv Leitch in renewed efforts to hammer out a new energy agreement before the existing package expires in two weeks.

Cash stash suspect goes free

MONTREAL (CP) — An 80-year-old man, questioned after $290,000 was found under his house, was released Monday by police without being charged.

The man, not identified, was held overnight after stacks of $100 and $50 bills were found neatly wrapped and piled in a crawl space.

They said they are puzzled by the find but suspect the money was stolen.

"It's probably only part of the total amount," said Constable Norman Couillard. "Criminals usually split the money up quickly after a robbery."

Canadian trio to be beatified

OTTAWA (CP) — Defence Minister Gilles Lamontagne will lead a 12-member delegation to the Vatican next week to witness beatification ceremonies — one of the steps along the road to sainthood — for three Canadians who lived three centuries ago.

The delegation will be in Rome June 22-24, the external affairs department said Monday.

The Canadians being beatified are:

—Bishop Francois de Montmorency-Laval, who lived between 1623 and 1703 and was the first Canadian bishop with a diocese that covered the whole North American continent.

—Mother Marie de l'Incarnation, who established the Ursuline Order in Canada, the first religious order for women in this country. She lived between 1599 and 1672.

—Kateri Tekakwitha, a dominant figure in the early history of the Roman Catholic church in New France. She died in 1680 at the age of 24.

Hooker laws inequitable?

OTTAWA (CP) — New Democrat MP Sven Robinson said Monday the Criminal Code should be amended to eliminate a "double standard" which allows the prosecution of female prostitutes but permits men to openly harass women on the streets.

"We ought to deal with males on an equitable basis," said Robinson, who represents the Vancouver-area riding of Burnaby.

Robinson said a British Columbia court has ruled that males in B.C. cannot be charged for harassing women. An Ontario court has ruled they can.

Justice Minister Jean Chretien told Robinson in the Commons that he is aware of the problem and is looking for solutions.

Robinson asked Justice Minister Jean Chretien in the Commons how he would deal with the large number of prostitutes in Vancouver, which included some as young as 11 and 12.

Chretien told Robinson he would like to proceed as quickly as possible.

CN layoffs begin

MONTREAL (CP) — Layoffs that will eventually affect about 800 railway carmen this summer have begun in Canadian National and Canadian Pacific repair and maintenance shops east of the Rockies.

CN Rail laid off the first of 519 men Friday and layoffs will continue through August. About half the carmen work in regional "running" maintenance shops, the balance in main repair yards in Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal.

CP Rail began laying off about 250 of its employees in May. About 70 work in main shops, the remaining 180 maintain cars on the road in Quebec and the Atlantic Provinces.

Shops servicing Alberta and British Columbia will not be affected.

Blais new StatsCan chief

OTTAWA (CP) — Responsibility for Statistics Canada has passed to Jean-Jacques Blais, supply and services minister, from Donald Johnston, treasury board president, a Statistics Canada spokesman said today.

Information director David Davidson said Blais assumed the responsibility Friday and that Johnston had said in a letter to the statistics agency's employees that Johnston had known when he was appointed, his post would be temporaty.

The agency became a treasury board responsibility under the Progressive Conservative government of Joe Clark. Sinclair Stevens, an agency critic when he was in opposition, was appointed minister responsible.

Sports fishing has increased each year in Active Pass. This year, the effect of the expected increase, combined with the additional ferry crossings, has added to the potential conflicts in Active Pass.

B.C. Ferry Corporation, after consulting with its captains has developed new operating rules for its own vessels and modified its sailing schedule, in an endeavour to reduce any potential problems.

R.C.M.P. and federal fishing patrols will also contribute to an improvement in traffic control in Active Pass.

Canadian arms dealer jailed

OTTAWA (CP) — Officials here were surprised Monday when a Vermont judge sent artillery developer Gerald Bull to jail for shipping arms to South Africa without an export permit.

Nevertheless, that jail sentence is unlikely to be a decisive factor when the federal cabinet deals with a proposal to feed more government money into Space Research Corp., a Canadian branch of the company founded by Bull, a Canadian.

Nor has it prevented the government from inviting two Space Research officials to a secret conference here next week on long-range artillery systems.

"Space Research will be involved in the conference," G.P. Cosgrove, a spokesman for the department of industry, trade and commerce, a sponsor, said in an interview. "They have not been found guilty of anything in Canada and they have the technical expertise."

About 350 delegates from North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries will be here for the conference.

"We didn't think with Bull's connections that he would go to jail," an official of the supply and services department said in another interview. "He is a Canadian but he was made a U.S. citizen by presidential edict, I think.

"They needed his expertise. He is a very clever man."

Bull, 52, and former Space Research president Rodgers Gregory, 59, were sentenced Monday to one year in jail. Half the sentence was suspended. Space Research, now known as Saber Industries, was fined $45,000.

Further charges may be laid in Canada, depending upon the outcome of a secret court hearing under way in Montreal.

The Vermont court was told Bull and Gregory directed an elaborate scheme in which military hardware, bearing false shipping papers, was trucked from the firm's isolated compound straddling the Quebec-Vermont border to Saint John, N.B., then shipped to Antigua, a Caribbean island, and finally to South Africa.

The matter of whether to put further government funds into the company is before the cabinet, he said, adding he expects to be able to make an announcement before the end of June.

More than $5 million in government money has gone into Space Research's Canadian entities since Bull developed the Black Brant rocket in the 1960s.

Flexible prime rates defended

TORONTO (CP) — A decline in the Bank of Canada's prime lending rate does not necessarily mean banks should lower their interest rates, the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association said Monday.

Banks were criticized in the Commons on Friday for not lowering their interest rates to match the half-a-percentage-point decline in the Bank of Canada's rate.

Robert MacIntosh said in a statement the relationship between the central bank's rate and other interest rates has never been constant.

MacIntosh said most banks reduced their prime rates 1.25 percentage points May 14, but the central bank's rate fell only 0.73 points the next day.

"The treasury bill rate is subject to many influences such as the government's cash position, foreign holdings of Canadian assets, and other factors, as well as the Bank of Canada's current policy.

"Therefore, in any given short interval, the treasury bill rate cannot, by itself, be a complete measure of market conditions."

'Outcast' West no longer true

VANCOUVER (CP) — Western Canadians should stop playing "the role of the Lone Ranger or the noble outcast" and jump on the federal government bandwagon to reform the constitution, says Employment Minister Lloyd Axworthy.

In a speech prepared for delivery Monday to the Canadian Club of Vancouver, Axworthy said westerners "are always eager to detect signs of eastern heavy-handedness, eastern indifference or eastern lust for western resources."

Much of the dissatisfaction the West feels towards the East was caused by problems which no longer exist, said the MP for Winnipeg Fort-Garry who is Prime Minister Trudeau's only western minister in the Commons.

On a per capita basis, investment in the West and average annual income are higher than the national average, he said, making the region more powerful on the national scene and no longer a supplicant at the constitutional negotiating table.

"But the West will not be able to make its potential contribution, nor realize the great benefits to be derived from a vibrant federal system, if our approach to constitutional reform is burdened under the weight of old grievances, old wars and a siege mentality."

Brewery chief Leeming dies

LONDON, Ont. (CP) - Lloyd Bateman Leeming, former vice-president and secretary of John Labatt Ltd., died Saturday at the age of 57.

A native of Duncan, Leeming attended UBC and graduated from law school in 1950.

He joined the brewery in 1953, was appointed vice-president in 1959 and named company secretary in 1962.

Five years later he became president and general manager of Labatt's Ontario Breweries Ltd.

The Lord is my Shepherd

I shall not want

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures

He restoreth my soul

He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake

Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death

I will fear no evil

For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff
they comfort me

before me in the
enemies

Thou anointest my head with oil

My cup runneth over

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

God in his wisdom

The boon his love had given

And though the body
slumbers here

The soul is safe in heaven.

Second look at Magna Carta

LONDON (AP) — Britons and tourists passing through Trafalgar Square were given a rare treat — a two-hour reading of Magna Carta to mark the anniversary of its signing.

All 63 sections of the document were read aloud by members of the Save England Crusade, which sought to show the public that the Magna Carta is still as relevant today as it was in 1215.

Wheelchair gardening

In my mailbag recently was a particularly delightful letter from a reader, an elderly gentleman whose wife is confined to a wheelchair, describing certain steps they have taken so they can both continue to enjoy gardening.

The first consideration when they sold their former large house and built a new one was to provide easy access to the garden area and this was accomplished by installing a three-inch step onto a concrete sidewalk around the outside, making wheelchair manoeuvres fairly easy.

Then they built planters around three sides of the house, eight inches high and 18 inches wide (my metric converter tells me that's 24 centimetres high and 46 cm wide) and these can be easily reached from the wheelchair.

"These contain tulips planted close to the inner edges for early color, also some hyacinths. The centre lengths of each of the south and west planters are planted with various colors of geraniums including Martha Washington," my correspondent says. "These we take cuttings from in August and September, putting them in deep flats of pure perlite and keeping them in a tiny greenhouse . . ."

Their specially designed greenhouse is just three feet by four feet by eight feet high and is built under the southwest overhang of the roof. They also use it to store delicate plants such as some special fuschias in case they lose some over the winter.

Among other steps this imaginative couple has taken to enable them to continue gardening with a minimum of physical effort is to outline their vegetable patch with two by sixes to prevent the grass from invading it and, after adding compost and rototilling it in, the plot is covered for the winter with black plastic bought in rolls on sale to prevent weeds from taking over after everything is harvested.

Another handicapped lady I know of, also an ardent gardener confined to a wheelchair, is able to continue her green-thumb activites by dint of the fact her husband built some raised beds separated by planked corridors through which she can easily move her wheelchair.

Another reader told me of a simple solution for folks who aren't able to bend over while gardening — it's a board covered with carpet to kneel or sit on. The same lady pointed out that a tack puller, sort of a sharply forked screw driver-type tool, slightly curved, is great for digging out small but firmly entrenched weeds.

I have often remarked on the fact that even though they now live in apartments, long-time gardeners continue their favorite pastime by one means or another, container plantings on the balcony or a collection of houseplants or even by renting a nearby garden area but one reader has passed along a dilly of a story about how one lady is coping.

"She plants the alleys," this reader explains. "She's up bright and early every morning, tending her 'garden' and during the summer months we have the most abundant alley in the city I would guess."

He says the lady has planted myriad flowers, raspberries and even small trees all along the edge of the lane beside the fencing "and we enjoy watching her."

An equally intriguing letter from another reader reveals that there are more ways of greening up a lawn than simply dosing it with water and fertilizer. He was told of this by a friend who had just returned from a Florida vacation but he didn't really believe it until he wrote several Southern U.S. cities asking for confirmation.

It seems that throughout the sunny south many property owners use a green dye called lawn and foliar plant colorant, made by several chemical companies, to provide the traditional coloring to their weather-browned lawns.

Just a reminder that entries for the Victoria Horticultural Society's Summer Show, to be held Friday and Saturday, June 27 and 28, at the First United Church Hall, 932 Balmoral, must be postmarked no later than next Tuesday.

Newcomers to the city and novices in this gardening hobby are especially invited to participate. Anyone may exhibit and show schedules may be obtained from Mrs. Shirley McMinn, 3557 Quadra St., phone 382-9836.

Violent crime rate up 13.5% in Saanich

Violent crime took an upward swing last year in Saanich, says the police department's 1979 annual report released Monday.

Increased numbers of rapes, robberies and assaults resulted in a 13.5 per cent climb in the violent crime rate over 1978.

There were 10 rapes reported last year, up from three cases in 1978 — an increase of 233 per cent. Fifty-seven other sexual offenses were reported compared to 28 in 1978.

The report recommended that a two-man team assigned in 1979 to investigate sex crimes should keep operating this year.

Although crimes against people increased, the total number of cases is considerably lower than 1977.

Robberies numbered 15 cases in 1979 from 6 cases reported in 1978, an increase of 150 per cent.

Assaults were up to 189 from 182 in 1978.

Three attempted murders were reported last year, up from two the year before.

Incidents of theft over $200 increased from 268 to 367 cases, or 36 per cent.

Break-ins were down 20 per cent, theft of motor vehicles decreased 19 per cent and theft under $200 dropped five per cent.

The 115-man force solved an average of 40.1% of its cases last year, a slight drop from 1978, according to Chief Bob Peterson.

Peterson noted that Saanich's ratio of one police officer for every 638.1 citizens is higher than the provincial average of one officer per 587.1 citizens.

However, Saanich had the second-lowest number of Criminal Code offences per 1,000 population for all B.C. municipal police forces.

Fraud, possession of offensive weapons, possession of stolen property and wilful damage offenses all dropped in 1979.

Driving offenses increased from 515 to 563.

There were eight traffic fatalities last year compared to six in 1978 but injuries dropped from 711 to 696 last year.

Total traffic accidents numbered 2,082, up from 2,017 in 1978.

Meanwhile, criminal offenses in Saanich during the first five months of 1980 are higher than the same period last year.

Criminal offenses to the end of May number 2,553 compared to 2,493 for the same time last year, according to Saanich police department's latest crime and traffic statistics.

A total of 550 crimes have been reported since May 1 of this year. During May last year 492 criminal offenses were recorded.

Police have cleared 187 cases this month compared to 175 cleared in May of 1979.

During the five-month period this year 810 cases were cleared. In the 1979 five-month period police had wiped 954 cases off the books.

Traffic accidents this May numbered 198, compared to 163 in May of 1979.

So far this year, four people have been killed and 301 injured in traffic accidents, compared to five fatalities and 271 injuries suffered during the same time last year.

U.S. drivers cost us $100M

Times News Services

The number of U.S. motorists filling their tanks at Canadian border points has increased by 53 per cent in the last year and Canadians are subsidizing them at the rate of about $100 million annually, a Progressive Conservative MP charged Monday.

Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre) told the Commons that the latest Statistics Canada figures show more than one million U.S. motorists crossed the border for less than one day in April, 1980.

Noting a similar trend among foreign airlines, truckers and ship owners, Andre sought unsuccessfully to have the Liberal government release estimates of the amount of transportation fuel sold in Canada that ends up across the border.

Canadian gasoline prices are as much as 50 cents-a-gallon cheaper than in many U.S. regions. So far, the government has given little indication it is worried about any drain on domestic supply.

The Alberta MP also said the cost should be made public as well as "government plans, if any, to deal with this situation."

A federal subsidy on expensive imported oil ensures the domestic wellhead price of $14.75 a barrel is paid across the country, compared to the world price of about $35 a barrel.

Cost of an import compensation program that makes up the difference between world and domestic prices is estimated at close to $4 billion for the current fiscal year.

But pressure from economists and energy experts is mounting for the government to increase the price of oil and natural gas.

James Krammer, a McMaster University energy expert, told the Consumers' Association of Canada annual meeting Monday that a shocking increase in prices now may be the best way to convince Canadians to realistically face the energy-hungry future.

He said consumers must face inevitably higher prices and it is better to get used to them now than later.

"The longer we put it off, the greater the shock will be," he told delegates in Hamilton, Ont.

And John Foster, the incoming chairman of the Canadian Nuclear Association said Monday that Canadians should pay the world price for oil to encourage development of other energy sources such as nuclear power.

Foster said the lower price of Canadian oil might defer the development of costly tar sands projects and nuclear reactors to generate electric power until there was no choice.

The result could be disastrous, with neither time nor money to develop alternative energy sources when the crunch comes, he said, but higher prices for oil would force action sooner.

Oil pricing policy is a political hot potato and proposals to change the current pricing formula are being negotiated by the federal and Alberta governments.

The present formula expires at the end of this month and Alberta has rejected a federal interim proposal that prices be increased $2 a barrel until Oct. 1 when a permanent formula could be devised.

Federal Energy Minister Marc Lalonde has warned Alberta not to unilaterally increase the price of its oil.

He told a television interviewer last weekend that if Alberta attempts to raise the price on its oil Ottawa will consider invoking the Petroleum Administration Act to fix the price itself.

Meanwhile, in the U.S., almost a year after Congress and President Carter decided a crash program to develop synthetic fuels was needed, House of Representative and Senate negotiators have approved a multi-billion-dollar bill to start the industry.

In finishing months of work on the measure Monday, the conferees also directed Carter to resume filling the strategic petroleum reserve, the U.S. stockpile of oil, at the rate of at least 100,000 barrels a day.

Teacher Joan Hoffman says visit hopefully will allay fears youngsters often feel when they're taken to emergency or admitted to hospital for treatment.

$200,000 fire guts cabaret

An early morning fire that gutted the Surfside Club caused an estimated $200,000 damage, Victoria fire officials said today.

Cause of the blaze at the rock cabaret in the basement of Hartwig Court, 1208 Wharf, has not been determined but faulty electrical wiring is suspected.

The fire was spotted by a city policeman on patrol at 3:50 a.m., about an hour after club staff had left for the night.

Firemen from all three city fire halls attended and managed to confine the blaze to the club. No one was injured.

The club was destroyed and there was considerable smoke damage to offices in the upper floors of the three-storey brick building.

Deputy chief Fred Severson put structural loss at $100,000 and another $100,000 loss to contents including $50,000 to $60,000 worth of sound equipment belonging to guest band, Blitz of Toronto.

Severson said the fire appeared to have started in wiring in the ceiling above the bar.

By the time the fire was detected, the club was engulfed in flames.

Earlier in the evening the four-member band group had complained of troubles with their equipment, possibly due to a short in the wiring, but Severson said firemen have ruled that out as a possible cause of the fire.

The band was mid-way through a cross-Canada tour but now will have to cut short their trip.

Club manager David Krenbrink was not available for comment.

The building is owned by Cedric Steele. The loss is fully insured.

Picketing slows food to Island

Striking Woodward's food floor clerks spread their picketing to B.C. mainland ferry terminals Monday, effectively halting truck movement of goods to the Victoria and Port Alberni stores, a union official said.

Unionized ferry workers, refused to issue tickets to the truckers, said Bryan Denton, secretary-treasurer of the Retail Clerks Union, which represents striking clerks at the Victoria food floor.

The pickets did not affect sailings or halt other traffic, he added.

He said the picketing will continue as long as necessary to put pressure on Woodward's in the two-week-old strike.

"As far as I know we stopped everything yesterday," Denton said today.

The picketing is inconvenient, but so far the company has been able to maintain a full assortment of stock in its food floors, said Bill Brown, company personnel vice-president.

Unionized employees at the food distribution centre have refused to cross picket lines, which Brown has warned could lead to closure of Woodward's 13 food floors.

City okays suds sales

There will be beer in the stands at Royal Athletic Park this summer after city council's parks and recreation committee agreed today to a request from two of the park's major tenants.

Victoria Budgets of the Northwest Fastball League club and Victoria Blues of the professional Northwest Baseball League had asked the city to expand the sale of beer at the park to allow people to drink in the seats.

Last August the city permitted an enclosed area for the sale of beer behind the stands, out of sight of the baseball and fastball diamond.

"Where it is now is barbaric. It is like a cattle corral," said Robert Peden, president of the Blues.

The committee decided to allow beer in the seats for a 30-day trial period. Recreation director Jack Morgan will monitor the situation closely and will have the power to suspend sales or limit the area for drinking if problems occur.

Earlier this spring, consumption of beer in the seats at Nat Bailey Stadium on Little Mountain was granted for home baseball games of Vancouver Canadians of the Pacific Coast League.

Court strikes down Fisheries Act rule

OTTAWA (CP) — A section of the federal Fisheries Act which places a blanket prohibition on logging operations in waters frequented by fish, is beyond the powers of Parliament, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled today.

In a unanimous judgment, the court erased a conviction against Dan Fowler who was charged with unlawfully putting debris into waters at or near Forbes Bay, B.C., while engaged in logging.

A verdict of guilty was imposed by a County Court judge. The British Columbia Court of Appeal agreed.

Government lawyers argued in the Supreme Court that the section of the Fisheries Act was necessary as preventive legislation intended for the federal duty to preserve and protect fish. They said that its validity did not depend on showing that the operations to which it related caused actual harm to a fishery.

Mr. Justice Ronald Martland, writing reasons for the Supreme Court, said the section covered a wide field of logging activities and the amount of substance deposited in the water didn't matter.

"The legislation extends to cover not only water frequented by fish but also water that flows into such water, ice over any such water and any place which slash, stumps and other debris are likely to be carried into such water," he said.

But the section made no attempt to link the banned activity to actual or potential harm to fisheries.

"It is a blanket prohibition of certain types of activity, subject to provincial jurisdiction, which does not delimit the elements of the offence so as to link the prohibition to any likely harm to fisheries," said Mr. Justice Martland.

Recession brink nearer

OTTAWA (CP) — The value of goods and services in the economy for the first three months of this year declined for the second consecutive quarter, suggesting the country is on the verge of a recession.

Figures released today by Statistics Canada show the gross national product fell 0.5 per cent for the first quarter, representing a decline of two per cent at annual rates.

Private sector forecasters had expected the decrease in the GNP as another indication of an approaching recession, defined as two consecutive quarters of economic decline.

The last time economic production dropped as much was in the second quarter of 1974 when the recession lasted until early 1975.

Excluding the effects of price increases and adjusting for seasonal variations, Statistics Canada said the sources of weakness in the economy continued to be residential construction, down 6.1 per cent, merchandise exports, down 2.2 per cent and personal spending on goods, up only 0.4 per cent.

Flights nipped

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Continental Airlines, citing overcapacity spurred by the "realities of the current recession," announced Monday it would cut flights by 20 per cent this fall and lay off 1,200 workers.

The carrier said the 10-per-cent reduction of its 12,000-member workforce is the largest in its 46-year history.

Phillips drags feds over coal

Industry Minister Don Phillips had some bitter words Monday for Senator Ray Perrault following the collapse of a federal-provincial deal on northeast coal.

"He fights very hard to protect the Liberals and the federal government in B.C. but I don't think he does that good a job representing B.C.'s position in Ottawa," said Phillips.

Perrault, government leader in the Senate, denied Monday that Ottawa's intransigence forced B.C.'s decision to go it alone in developing the Sukunka coal deposits.

He told a Vancouver press conference that, while B.C. will be building the 115-kilometre rail spur into the coal fields, the federal government still plans to spend $400 million on other aspects of the project.

Perrault did not spell out how the $400 million will be spent and Phillips promptly disputed the amount.

"There was no $400 million talked about in our negotiations with Ottawa," he said. "I don't know where he gets his figures from."

The minister said Ottawa's involvement will be limited to about $70 million for upgrading existing CNR track and building the coal port at Prince Rupert.

Phillips also revealed the spur line — estimated to cost between $215 million and $300 million — will not be built by the B.C. Railway.

He said the government intends to seek out the best engineering advice and the most efficient construction firms, build the line and then turn it over to the BCR.

NDP critic Gary Lauk demanded Monday that the government release all relevant documents and information on the financing of the coal development.

"We neither favor nor oppose this latest proposal for northeast coal development. There have been many proposals over the years. The latest proposal may be worth serious study," Lauk said.

"When the people have all the information, the people and the legislature will be in a position to make a rational judgement."

Crash victim belted for $185,000

VANCOUVER (CP) — Karen Bracey's failure to wear her seatbelt on June 23, 1975, cost her $185,000 Monday in B.C. Supreme Court when Justice J. G. Gould reduced her $741,075 auto accident award by that amount for contributory negligence.

And her decision to embark on what Gould termed a "potentially disastrous expedition" to a Bellingham, Wash., tavern, cost her an additional $111,000.

Total damages were assessed at $741,000, but Gould reduced the award by 40 per cent to $445,000.

Miss Bracey, then 26, received serious head injuries when the car in which she was riding as a front-seat passenger collided with another car that had spun out of control on Highway 401 about one kilometre west of the Port Mann bridge. As a result of her injuries she will require full-time care for the rest of her life.

Gould ruled that Marilyn Johnson, driver of the car in which Miss Bracey was riding, and David Thomas Agencies Ltd., owners of the vehicle, are together liable for 30 per cent of the total damages, and that Allan Marshall, driver of the car that went out of control, is responsible for the remaining 30 per cent.

Gould, in his reasons for judgment, said that on a Sunday morning three young women — Marilyn Johnson, Miss Bracey and Carol Ann Dixon — decided on the spur of the moment to go to the Bellingham pub and once there drank beer, talked, danced "and generally enjoyed themselves."

He noted that on the way back to Vancouver they were stopped by a highway patrol officer and told to get coffee and food before continuing, which they did.

Later, the car, travelling an estimated 38 km-h to 48 km-h struck the Johnson vehicle and Miss Bracey was thrown into the windshield.

"The plea of contributory negligence (by the defence) on the part of Karen for embarking upon, and taking part in, this expedition to the Bellingham tavern I think is tenable," said Gould. "I find that Karen was contributorily negligent in not looking after her own safety in the circumstances of this potentially disastrous expedition."

He said the women wore the lap portion of their safety belts when they crossed the U.S.-Canada border "for appearances sake" but that Miss Bracey was not wearing any part of it at the time of the accident.

Sarah Davidson of Masset on the Queen Charlottes sees trouble ahead if the B.C. Ferry Corp. sticks to its policy of not handling boxes for walk-on passengers.

She phoned earlier this week in a bit of a tiff after finding out at Swartz Bay ferry terminal that the boxed items she and her husband Claude were carrying wouldn't be taken on the ferry and put on the bus.

They eventually went to the Pat Bay airport and took a morning flight to Vancouver.

Betty Nicolson, ferries' information officer, explains that the long-standing policy not to handle foot-passengers' boxes and certain other things is in the passengers' self interest.

Often the boxes aren't packaged properly or contain fragile items and if they were handled by the ferry employees goods might be lost or damaged.

Mrs. Davidson says that policy will be hard on the Queen Charlotte Islanders when B.C. Ferries begins its service to the Island from Prince Rupert in October.

Many of the native people and residents don't have luggage and are accustomed to carrying things in boxes.

Thousands of public sector employees mass on legislative lawn during Monday's pension rally

More action looms in wake of massive pension protest

By MIKE HUGHES

Public sector employees got their meeting with the provincial government today but the threat of further action still exists unless pension legislation is withdrawn.

Norm Richards, president of the B.C. Government Employees Union (BCGEU), made that clear Monday to a cheering, clapping crowd, estimated by police to number close to 6,000.

The gathering on the legislative lawn was the largest in recent years and capped a series of 17 rallies held around the province to protest the planned pension amendments.

Last week in Vancouver, Richards said BCGEU officials would hold a special conference to plan further action if Premier Bill Bennett didn't agree to a meeting this week to discuss the pension issues.

On Monday, only hours before the rally kicked off at the McPherson Playhouse, Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe announced the meeting for today.

But Richards told the rally there will be further action unless the pension legislation is scrapped.

He also called for an immediate start on formal consultation with the union and an inquiry into pension investments.

Richards reiterated his charge that the government is using scare tactics to try to convince public service employees that their pension plan is in poor shape.

"The facts say otherwise," said Richards.

He said the various pension plans for the different public sector groups should be treated separately.

As for the public service superannuation plan, the one covering his union members, Richards said it is in better financial shape than any in the country.

He said that according to latest figures there is $687 million in the plan.

"It is projected that any unfunded liability in our pension plan will dissappear without change in premiums within 10 years," he said.

In 1978, $38.7 million went into the plan and $22.4 million came out in pension benefits, he said. The comparable figures for 1979 were $42.4 million and $27.9 million.

"It is obvious that the government is trying to mislead people into thinking that the pension plan is going broke."

The average return on the BCGEU plan over the past 10 years has been 6.5 per cent, he said. Last year, the interest rate was 7.5 per cent.

If the rate of return was increased one per cent, the extra $7 million a year would finance the COLA payments to all pensioners, he said.

The focus of the public sector employees' wrath is legislation which would increase by half a per cent the employee's contribution to the plan and limit cost-of-living increases to eight per cent in any one year.

The pensions now have open-ended indexing, meaning benefits rise on a percentage basis along with the Consumer Price Index.

Jim Kinnaird, president of the B.C. Federation of Labor, repeated what he had said at other rallies — that unless the government keeps its hands off, there will be a major confrontation with organized labor in the province.

He said the Bennett government is having trouble with its image.

"Bill is on a downhill ski slope," he said.

"There's only one place he's going to go in the final analysis, right to the bottom, right down."

The rally began at 1 p.m. at the McPherson Playhouse with speeches from other union officials and then a march down Government Street.

Because the government employees were off the job in the afternoon, liquor stores were closed and other government business disrupted.

Ferry workers held their own study sessions, resulting in a number of cancelled sailings.

He leaps to avoid fighting

A 22-year-old man jumped off the Johnson Street bridge rather than get involved in a fight early today, city police said.

A police spokesman said Irving Theodore Louie was walking across the bridge about 5:30 a.m. when four youths he had fought with earlier started running after him.

Police said Louie climbed the railing at the north end of the bridge and jumped into the water.

A passer-by reported the incident to police but by the time officers arrived, the youths had scattered and Louie had reached shore.

Heritage fears for 105-year-old Truth Centre building

Historic home to go?

Heritage buffs are worried that the Victoria Truth Centre has plans to expand its church at 1201 Fort.

They fear it might mean demolition of historic Pentrelew, a 105-year-old mansion which once was the home of B.C.'s first attorney-general.

"We've just heard from various sources that something is happening up there," said architect John Keay at a meeting Monday of city council's heritage advisory committee.

In a decision which requires council endorsement, the committee voted to add the house and grounds to the primary list of heritage buildings in Victoria.

It means if the church applies for demolition or building permits, the heritage committee must be notified, at which point it could take further steps to protect the building, including formal designation as a heritage structure.

Dr. Emma Smiley, minister at the Truth Centre for 40 years, said it is too early to comment on the church's plans and in two or three months the Truth Centre will make a public statement.

The Truth Centre has occupied the house since 1949. It was built in 1875 for Henry Pering Pellew Crease, Victoria's first barrister and founder of a well-known legal family who arrived here in 1858.

He was elected to the legislative assembly and became attorney-general when B.C. was still a British colony.

Pentrelew — Cornish for "house on land sloping two ways" — is described as once the foremost residence in the province by Martin Segger and Douglas Franklin in their book on Victoria's architecture.

It was built among five acres of gently sloping lawns, formal gardens, tennis courts and orchards. The architectural style was high Victorian Italianate, according to Segger and Franklin. Much of the details and decorative work were removed in this century, but three acres of the original property remain.

Tsehum appeal to Rogers

The B.C. Agricultural Land Commission has turned down an appeal by North Saanich council over the removal of 25 acres at Tsehum Harbor from the Agricultural Land Reserve.

But council hasn't given up the fight.

At a meeting Monday night aldermen agreed to appeal the decision now to Environment Minister Stephen Rogers.

Municipal clerk Ed Fairs said today a letter will be sent out later this week.

The property was removed from the ALR last year despite council's opposition.

Porperty owner North Saanich Marina Ltd. has applied to build a small subdivision on half acre lots at the site.

That application is now before municipal approving officer Darrel Ashby. He has been given until July 8 to come to a decision.

Council also decided to hold a special meeting at 3 p.m. Thursday to hear a proposal by the recreation commission for expanding the facilities at Panorama Leisure Centre.

It is understood the commission is contemplating building squash and handball courts and making other improvements at the centre but the details have not been released.

'Third-rate' fire service prompts call for report

Esquimalt Ald. Larry Mann says the municipality's unified police and fire department is providing only third-rate fire service and he called for the B.C. Police Commission to release a report about the service presented verbally last year.

Mann says in a press release issued today police commissioner G.L. Dalton should relesase his report to the public "so that residents have the true picture of the very unsatisfactory conditions existing in the combined police-fire force, and the at best third-rate fire protection being provided the residents of Esquimalt."

Mann's comments follow a decision made by council Monday to call for the resignation of the police board for its rejection of a proposal to improve the existing methods of running the combined police and fire department.

Esquimalt Police Union president Sgt. Bill Wyatt said the union will not join council's call for the police board to resign but it says the existing method of running the combined police and fire department cannot continue.

Council called for the resignation of the police board because of its decision last week to turn down a proposal to improve the method of providing combined fire and police services to the municipality and increase the department's staff.

. . . wants true picture

Mayor Ken Hill, who sits on the police board along with a municipal appointee and three members appointed by the attorney-general's ministry, said the board was divided on the question.

He and the municipal appointee supported the proposal but the other three members opposed it.

Wyatt suggested that if the board wouldn't go along with the recommendation, which was developed by the union and a committee of council, the next choice would be to consider a proposal from the union that the municipality form a small local fire department.

He said the union still opposes the first suggestion from council that the municipality contract out its fire department needs to Victoria.

Nursing home safety in stages

City council's fire prevention committee today approved a compromise in which the owner of a Victoria nursing home will carry out several improvements for fire safety immediately and complete the rest by the end of 1981.

Lawrence Hitchmough, owner of Grant Place, 998 Humboldt, and the fire department worked out an agreement following an initial meeting with the committee at which he said doing everything at once as ordered by the department would put him out of business.

The agreement specifies that Hitchmough will upgrade the fire alarm and detection system, improve exit signs and emergency lighting and rectify dead-end corridors and access to fire exit stairways.

Insp. Gordon Ferris of the fire department said the owner agrees that the safety of the patients at Grant Place is paramount, not the safety of the building, so the improvements mentioned will be done first. The committee set a deadline of Oct. 31.

Hitchmough asked for two to three years to carry out the rest of the upgrading but the aldermen gave him until Dec. 31, 1981.

The committee also got into an argument with Fire Chief Eric Simmons on the recent controversy over his department's fire safety upgrading program and scheduled a special meeting involving aldermen, the provincial fire commissioner, senior city staff and the fire department to get to the bottom of the issue.

Sidney man admits blue collar

A 29-year-old Sidney man admitted in a statement to Saanich police that he stabbed a 31-year-old woman in her home, a B.C. Supreme Court jury was told Monday.

Denis Barry McFadden gave the statement to Sgt. James Arnold and Const. John Archer March 18. He is accused of first-degree murder in the death March 17 of Marion Barbara MacKay at her home on Old West Saanich Road.

After the statement was admitted as evidence and Arnold and Archer gave their testimony, the prosecution closed its case. The trial, presided over by Mr. Justice Gordon MacKinnon, was to continue today.

McFadden told police he was at the woman's house about 6 p.m. to take measurements of a broken window pane. He said he had been there 10 days earlier to repair a hot water tank and fell against the pane.

On the second visit, he said he was in her bedroom taking measurements and she was also in the room.

Then what happened, asked police.

"I don't know what the hell happened."

Did you have a quarrel with her?

"Yeah."

Did you have a physical fight?

"No."

How did you come to stab her?

"I know there was a lot of raised voices. She began to shout at me. I was standing up, the curtains were open. I give her a shove. I was standing up on top of that dressing table. And she pushed me. She got hold of my two legs and I went back against that window. Then I was on the ground. And she was shouting. She was screaming. I think her back was to the window at that time and she started screaming at me. And somewhere round about then I stabbed her."

McFadden said he didn't know how many times he stabbed MacKay.

"It's like a bad dream. I don't know how I came to take a knife to her. I just don't know what the hell happened."

Afterwards, he said he ran from the house and drove home. He remembered that some of his tools and the knife were still at the house "so I began to panic. I went back the house on the Old West Saanich Road. I got all my tools and what have you, the knife and so forth."

He said when he returned, she was dead. When he first left the house, he said he didn't know whether she was dead or not.

"So I wrapped her up in a blanket and put her in the back of the car," he said.

"Then I went home and went into the house. She was still in the back of the car. So I took the tarpaulin off the boat. This was about 1 o'clock. I wrapped her up in the tarpaulin and put her in the back of the boat.

"I sat up most of the night until 3 o'clock or so. Then I got back into the car and drove back to the Old West Saanich Road. Then I saw all you fellows at that time. All the police were there. So then I drove home."

McFadden said he threw the knife, about eight to 10 inches long, into the ocean.

He said he didn't know where he was going to get rid of the body.

Were you going to dump her in the ocean, asked police.

"I couldn't, there is no hitch on the car. Once I knew you were coming I just sat tight."

Archer and Arnold also testified about a second interview March 31 in Wilkinson Road jail.

At that time, he was shown a carving knife, found by a citizen on a beach and admitted by the defence to be McFadden's, and he replied "ah-huh" and nodded affirmatively when asked if that was the knife he used to kill MacKay.

McFadden also said he had been talking to his lawyer and said "why are you guys going for premeditation. I told you guys that morning what happened. Don't try to make something that isn't there."

An earlier witness, James Stymeist, manager last spring for the Blue Army home maintenance referral agency, said McFadden joined the agency last November and did about five jobs a week between January and March.

He identified a dispatch slip showing a call was referred to McFadden to fix a leaking pipe at the MacKay residence on Old West Saanich Road. The call was received March 7.

Stymeist also said it was the agency's policy that tradesmen restrict themselves to their own craft and that a plumber shouldn't fix a window but have the matter re-dispatched to the office.

Under cross-examination, he said from records he is not aware of anything to prove McFadden went to the house and that any work was completed.

Police board to send two planning delegates

Saanich Police Board Monday approved spending $2,000 to sent two delegates to a police building planning and design workshop in Las Vegas in August.

The board decided to send the architect who is chosen to design the new multi-million dollar police building and a police department representative.

The workshop Aug. 25-29 includes topics like planning principles for modern police buildings, design considerations, budgeting for new buildings and future models for law enforcement structures.

A Calgary symposium on policing this Friday will be attended by a board member and senior police officer, the board decided.

How Saxon outruns Xerox.
(The Saxon 302 vs. the Xerox 2600)

Saxon starts faster. Our Saxon 302 compact plain paper copier starts faster and turns out copies quicker than the new Xerox 2600. That's just for starters.

Saxon runs easier. Our Saxon has superior features. Two paper cassettes holding more than double the paper supply of the Xerox 2600. Press-tone controls. A self-diagnostic system. And a few other advances Xerox hasn't caught up with.

Saxon runs you less money. With all this, the Saxon costs less to buy, rent or maintain than the Xerox.
